THE KING OF BEASTS.

Its Retirement Before the European Invasion of Asia and Africa.

Considered as a direct foe to man, the lion is not as formidable as its first cousin, the tiger. Formidable it certainly is, but it is losing power yearly. It is being "crowded out," and many lands through which it roamed at will can never again tremble at the thunders of its earth-shaking roar. Taking, for example, acknowledged history, which is but a grain of sand on the shore of creation, we find that the lion inhabited Europe. Supposing that a general European war were to break out, neither of the combatants would be obliged to take precautions against the lion as a hindrance to the transport service. Yet we find Herodotus, "the Father of History," as he has often been called, to the utter oblivion of Moses and his unknown predecessor, the writer of the "Book of the Wars of Jehovah," stating that the army of Xerxes was attacked by lions near Thessalonica, (now known as Salonica,) and that the lions only attacked the camels, not meddling with the men, or even with the horses. The reason is evident enough. The lions knew by experience that man possessed bows, arrows, spears and nets, and was a mysterious animal which could not be attacked without danger. Horses, too, were swift of foot, and could not be captured without more trouble than a lion cares to take. Moreover, the horse has an awkward way of lashing out with his hind hoofs when it can turn upon its enemy. Whereas, the camel is too slow of foot to escape by speed, and has no hoofs of which the lion would be afraid. That the lion was once plentiful we find from many passages of the Old Testament, too numerous for quotation. At the present day the lion is as extinct in Palestine as it is in Europe, and the shepherd need no longer fear it as a devastator of his flocks. The lion is "crowded out," obeying the same law as that which has extirpated the aborigional Tasmanians, and which is gradually destroying the Maori of New Zealand, the Papuan of Fiji, the black man of Australia and the red man of Northern America. They want too much room. It is impossible, for example, for a red man to maintain his family in comfort on less than a thousand acres of soil, so that when he comes in contact with races to whom a hundreth part of that land is sufficient, he is obliged to retire before them. So it is with the lion. His stronghold is Africa, though he extends partly into Asia, where he overlaps, as has been well said, the domain of the tiger. But Africa is being invaded on all sides by Europeans, and in consequence the lion has to retire before the conquering race. The animal is as practically extinct in Durban, Graham's Town, Cape Town, or indeed any European settlement, as in Greece or Palestine. Still, throughout the greater part of Africa the lion maintains its sway, though it is never as actively aggressive as the tiger. Even when age and infirmity compel it to become a man eater, it does not desolate whole districts, as does the tiger, but confines its depredations within a comparatively small limit. Except when an intruder passes near the spot where it is nurturing its young, it will seldom take the initiative and attack man, but will try to slip away quietly.—Good Words.

IGNORANT SERVANTS.

Their Incompetency in Many Instances Due to the Inexperience of the Mistress.

Two-thirds of the annoyances that we meet in life are undoubtedly due to ignorance. We commonly attribute this ignorance to others, and believe that if those about us were only up to our standards of intelligence most of the annoyances would disappear.

The ignorant servants usually are held accountable for many annoyances, but the real difficulty lies in an utter inability to give intelligent directions or instructions. Chaotic in her own mind as to the best way to produce certain results, how can the mistress give intelligent direction to those naturally dull of comprehension? No aim can be reached unless the method by which it is to be attained is at least tolerably clear to the mind. A General who did not have well-laid plans before he entered the battle, with a mind trained to decide and direct in emergencies, would not be able to guide his forces to certain victory.

The market is flooded with incompetent servants, but doubtless there are as many incompetent mistresses. Women who enter upon their position of mistress with about as clear a conception of its requirements as the newly-imported servant enters upon hers should not expect perfect service from imperfect instruction and direction. She who can not lead intelligently has no right to expect intelligent following.

When a part of every woman's education is the practical instruction in the knowledge necessary to conduct a home; when every woman enters her own house with a knowledge of the best methods by which a home is made a place of refuge, a haven of rest; when she enters upon her duties as home maker and keeper with a consciousness of the holy responsibility involved, we will find that knowledge of and consecration to her duties will bring intelligent and better service on the part of servants.—Christian Union.

—The Chevalier van Flewyck, of Louvain, has just perfected, after thirty-eight years of labor, a machine for recording all music extemporized upon the piano. His invention is worked by means of electricity, and he has been assisted in the mechanical details by M. Kermis, an engineer of Brussels.

—A tunnel is projected, to be bored under Gray's Peak, in the Rocky Mountains. It will be placed 4,441 feet below the summit of the mountain, will be 25,000 feet long, and will give direct communication between the valleys in the Atlantic Slope and those of the Pacific side, with a shortening of some 300 miles in the transmontane distance.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—The difficulty of sighting rifles in the dark in warfare has been ingeniously overcome by the use of luminous paint. The British War Office authorities have had some of these sights under trial for the past six months, and have now given their first order for them.

—A new method of manufacturing car-wheels has been tested at Wilkesbarre, Pa., with satisfactory results. By the old method three men could make only eighteen wheels per day of twelve hours. By the new process the same number of men can turn out a perfect wheel every minute, or 720 per day. One of the principal features of the new method is the use of a steel core, instead of one of sand, in casting the wheel. The core is removed by knocking out a center key, leaving the hole perfectly true and ready to put upon the axle at once, without dressing or boring.—Pittsburgh Post.

—Shoe-pegs require 100,000 cords of timber annually in their manufacture; matches, 300,000; lasts and boot trees, 500,000. All this is of the most superior quality, straight grained, and clear of knots and gnarls. To raise the telegraph poles of the country required 800,000 trees, and 300,000 more are required for annual repair. The railway ties of the country annually consume 75,000 acres of timber at least thirty years old, and the fencing of railways represents $45,000,000, and the annual repair $15,000,000. These are but a moiety of what is required of our forest supply. The burning of brick alone requires 2,000,000 cords of wood annually.—N. Y. Tribune.

Restore the Soil to Americans.

Every foot of land in the United States should belong only to citizens of the United States. At present twenty-nine foreign citizens are reported to be the owners of twenty millions of acres of American soil. This vast amount of land should belong to and be the homes of at least one hundred and twenty five thousand American families. The usual average of five persons to each family would make a total population on this land owned by foreigners, of seven hundred and twenty-five thousand souls; giving to each family one hundred and sixty acres. "America for Americans" is not the cry of narrow prejudice, but the watchword of personal independence and national freedom. The private property of any man may be taken for public use, when fair valuation and payment are made; under the same rule these lands should be taken from foreigners at a fair valuation; the price should be paid and the lands sold to actual settlers who are American citizens, or who have declared their intention to become such. American citizens should never become the rack-rented slaves of foreigners.

The coercion bill, now under discussion in the English Parliament, will, if it becomes a law, deprive Ireland of the last vestige of freedom. The very corner stone of English freedom is the right of trial by a jury of the peers of the accused. But this bill denies that right to Irishmen, and provides that men accused of crime in Ireland may be carried to England, and tried by a jury of their enemies. Such a trial would be a mere form, a bitter mockery of justice; accusation would be equivalent to conviction; and every Irishman who would dare to speak in defense of his country would be liable to be dragged off to England and sent to herd with the vilest criminals in jails or penal settlements.

How's Your Liver?

Is the Oriental salutation, knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. Simmons Liver Regulator has been the means of restoring more people to health and happiness by giving them a healthy Liver than any agency known on earth. It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy.

NEVER BEEN DISAPPOINTED.

As a general family remedy for Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation, etc., I hardly ever use anything else, and have never been disappointed in the effect produced; it seems to be almost a perfect cure for all diseases of the Stomach and Bowels.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, APRIL 9.....1887.

Mrs. A. W. Eibeshutz has gone on a visit to San Francisco; she expects to stay some weeks.

The Odd Fellows Lodge, of Independence, will celebrate their anniversary, April 26th, by a ball. Programme will be given next week.

Mrs. Russell, the mother of Mrs. W. S. Enos, and Mrs. Enos, mother of Mr. W S. Enos, arrived at Independence from Yolo county last Wednesday.

W. P. George, attorney, of Bishop Creek, is at Independence. He has important cases before the Superior Court, they will keep him here a week or two.

Several hundred dollars have already been subscribed for the Fourth of July celebration at Independence. Another meeting on the subject will be held to-night.

Mrs. S. G. Gregg has so far regained strength that she was able to start last Tuesday for Oakland; she will visit several friends and be absent from home a month or two.

Home made beer must moisten thirsty throats in future. The old rate on beer from St. Louis and Chicago was $100 a car. The new rates will be from Chicago $440, and from St. Louis $424.

The County Clerk has moved into his new quarters in the Court House. The bookcases, desks and shelves in the office are the best specimens of the grainer's art yet seen in the town; Nelligan has beaten all his former efforts.

The noted Hotel Del Monte, at Monterey, was destroyed by fire at the end of last week. The fire broke out near midnight, and though the house was full of people no lives were lost. It was considered the handsomest watering-place hotel in America. The hotel will be rebuilt.

Fathers and mothers have been flocking to town the past week with their children to have them vaccinated. No attention had been given to this matter for several years past, and a great many children had not been vaccinated; now hardly one remains without this protection.

John John, a well known miner, died rather suddenly last Tuesday at Keeler. He had been quite successful of late with a mine at Coso, south of Keeler. It is not known if he had any relatives in the country. Mr. W. Mitchell, a friend of the deceased, will look after his affairs.

LADIES will find relief from their Costiveness, Swimming in the Head, Colic, Sour Stomach, Headache, Kidney troubles, etc., by taking a dose of Simmons Liver Regulator after dinner or supper, so as to move the bowels once a day. Mothers will have better health and the babies will grow more robust by using the Regulator. If an infant shows signs of Colic, nothing like a few drops in water for relief. The Genuine has the red Z on front of Wrapper.

A correspondent who is opposed to the formation of an irrigation district under the law recently enacted by the Legislature, asks a number of questions, all of which he thinks must be answered in the negative, and each one, in his opinion, is sufficient objection of itself why the district should not be formed, and no canal built. Evidently this person has never seen the law, and has no knowledge whatever of its character. In fact he is not sure there is such a law, or whether the Legislature has yet adjourned, for he says, "and do you not think that if such a bill should become a law it would be an outrage upon the people?" This man and others may possess their souls in patience; they will not be affected by the district about to be formed. No property lying outside any canal that may be built can be taxed for building it; and only those whose lands can or may be irrigated with water taken from said canal can vote upon the question whether said irrigation district shall be formed. A map of the proposed district is already made, showing the line of the canal and the lands to be irrigated. The nicest care has been taken to leave out this and other objectors; their sacred right to scratch dry sand with the hens will be observed with scrupulous care. The men who own land within the proposed district, and who have intelligence enough to see that its value will be increased ten fold, will vote unanimously for the formation of the district; and these are the only persons who have any right to vote upon the question atall. The intent of the new law is that the water shall forever belong to the people themselves; that no capitalist or corporation shall make a monopoly of one of the elements created by Almighty God for the use and good of all.

Good News.

It will be good news for miners that the old rates of freight for shipping ores are restored. The charges for the various grades of ores will be the same in future as in the past.

Lively Business.

The first day the Land Office was open at Independence the land entries amounted to 6,580 acres. Entries were made under the Desert Land, Homestead and Timber Culture Acts.

Land Office Opened.

The Land Office, at Independence, was opened last Wednesday. A great deal of business had been kept back till the office should be moved from Bodie here, and the Register and Receiver are now kept very busy making entries. Large tracts of land are being located under the Desert Land Act, as well as under the Pre emption, Homestead and Timber Culture Acts. More locations have recently been made in the towships adjacent to Independence than in all the rest of Owens valley. The new officers appear to understand their duties clearly and the business is quickly done.

A Cheap Home.

One hundred and sixty acres of land; three acres in orchard, choice fruit; ten acres partly alfalfa, partly grain and garden; good water right; house of five rooms, one-half mile distant from school and post office. Every foot of the land good. Title U. S. patent. This will make a fine home for an industrious farmer. Will be sold very cheap; terms, cash. Apply to C. Mulholland, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

THE AMENDMENTS.

Reasons For and Against Their Adoption.

The committee appointed by the Bar of San Francisco have issued an address to the people of the State on the proposed amendments to the Constitution. Comparison is made between the Supreme Court of California and the Supreme Court of the United States, and of the States of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, and the Court of Appeals of New York. The number of Judges in each of these Courts is given, and the number of cases decided in each Court in a year. From all of which it appears that the Judges of our Supreme Court have much heavier burdens placed upon them than the Judges of the other Courts named. Since its organization in 1880, the Court has disposed of 4,555 cases, making an average of 650 cases in each year. But during the same time 4,858 new cases have come in, leaving 303 cases untried. The population and business of the State are rapidly increasing and the Court is getting further behind with its work. Delays of justice are most oppressive to the poor. A rich man can wait, but a poor man may be forced to give up his right by not being able to stand the loss and expense caused by delay. In law, more than anything else, relief to be of value to the poor must be speedy. To secure quicker decisions in all cases of appeal to the Supreme Court is the chief object of these amendments.

AGAINST THE AMENDMENTS.

A very able lawyer, the Superior Judge of Plumas county, Hon. G. G. Clough, takes strong ground in opposition to the amendments. We have not space to publish his communication in full, but give a synopsis.

Amendment No. 1 increases the salaries of Judges. Thus the salaries of twenty-seven Judges in office are increased $1,000 each, those of two Judges are increased $2,000 each, and the salaries of forty Judges remain as now—thirty-six receiving $3,000 per year, and four $4,000 each. This increase of salaries will demand an annual additional levy by the State sufficient to net $18,500, one-half of the salary of each Judge being paid by the State and the other half by the county. The thirty-five counties not benefitted by this raise of salaries will, therefore, tax ridden as they now are, be called upon to pay their proportion of this additional burden of annual expense. Every Superior Judge in the State must give his whole time to the duties of his office. The jurisdiction of all the Judges is the same, their authority the same; therefore there is no justice in making salaries unequal. One Judge, should be paid as much for the devotion of his whole time to the office as is another for doing the same thing. Perhaps it may serve as an illustration of the absurdity of such a grading of salaries to suggest that had not the ablest jurist of the State, Jackson Temple, been elected a Justice of the Supreme Court at the last election, he would, under this amendment, become a "second class Judge."

Amendment No. 2 has for its professed object the reorganization of the Supreme Court: Under this amendment the Chief Justice instead of being selected by the electors of the State to serve for twelve years, is selected from their number by the Justices themselves, and remains Chief Justice for two years. There is the same reason for this change, and no other or better, as there is for the election of a United States Senator by a Legislature chosen by the voters instead of by the voters themselves. If the voters are capable of selecting the Justices who are to elect from among themselves a Chief Justice, there appears no valid reason why the same voters are not competent to elect a Chief Justice.

The Court proper is divided into two departments as now. As at present constituted a department can not render a decision unless the three members concur. As proposed to be reorganized by this amendment a majority in each department may render a decision. In other words, two out of the seven Justices may affirm, reverse or modify any judgment of any Superior Court, unless a rehearing before the full Court shall be ordered. The practical working of the division of the Court into departments, even under the requirements of unanimity, has been many conflicting decisions by the departments—many petitions for rehearings in full Court—many divided opinions of the full Court—thus weakening the moral force of the majority opinion and thus increasing, to an alarming extent, the expense of appeals and delays of justice. An amendment abrogating the department system would have abundant reason to support it. The Supreme Court commission is to be continued for four years after the adoption of this amendment, and it is to have the same power to hear and decide cases that a department of the Court has. In other words, this amendment being adopted, we shall have three departments of the Supreme Court to vex the patience and exhaust the purses of litigants, whereas two departments have practically demonstrated the inherent vice of any division of the Court. There is no ground for supposing that a division into three departments will eradicate this inherent vice unless it is found in the adage "there is luck in odd numbers."

If the Chief Justice or any Justice should become permanently disqualified, either mentally or physically, to perform the duties of his office, he shall be paid a retiring salary of $250 per month for the remainder of his term. Why the third branch of this august tribunal is not included in this beneficent provision, the record saith not. Why the third class Judges of the Superior Courts are not provided for in a similar manner is not apparent, unless it occurred to the formulator of this amendment that no lawyer, unless on the verge of lunacy, idiocy or imbecility, would take such a position. From the context, though, this is the presumptive ground; for the proposition, standing out on the face of the provision, is that an idiotic, insane or imbecile Justice of the Supreme Court, is worth just as much to the State as the third class Superior Judge, when in as good a mental and physical condition, as such a Judge can be presumed to reach. While these amendments make no change in the personnel of the Supreme and Superior Courts, the increased salaries of the Judges and Justices now holding office, will cast upon the State at large an added annual burden of $29,000, and upon the counties having "first class Judges," an annual added burden of $18,000. And what are the people to get for this added burden? Surely the same Judges cannot be expected to do any better or any more work, simply because their salaries are raised. The present Judges schemed before conventions for nominations and appealed to the people for election.

The salaries were thought worth striving for then; these salaries should not be increased now. So far as they provide for insane, idiotic or imbecile Justices, the amendments accomplish nothing not within the present power of the Legislature, except to give them the same salary, on removal, as a "third clas" (now second class) Judge is entitled to when in his normal state of mental and physical vigor. The Legislature has ample power, by concurrent resolution, to remove all such Justices, unless prominent attorneys can be found to swear that the Justices attacked "are just as competent to discharge their duties as when elected." But there is no more reason why a Judge earning a large salary should be pensioned when he becomes mentally or physically incompetent than there is for pensioning any other State officer in the same condition. The poor house and the asylum are open to them as to all others; and there is no good reason why a private poor house or asylum should be endowed for their especial benefit.

These amendments are forced to a vote with indecent haste; the Press has not had sufficient time to discuss them; they bear upon their face the badge of fraud; they shrink from public discussion. The electors of the State should therefore unanimously vote down amendments numbers 1 and 2. They should teach future Legislatures that when nothing more important to the public interests is involved than the mere raising of salaries for the benefit of present incumbents of office, the electors are not to be restricted to less than thirty days within which to consider amendments to the organic law and are not to be put to the vast expense of a special election for the sole benefit of such incumbents.

LAND ABUSES.

Settlement Hindered and Settlers Grossly Misled.

During the past few months many and bitter complaints have been made by parties who have come from San Francisco to Owens valley in search of land. No public mention has been made of these complaints up till this time, for the reason that it was thought best to wait till the Land Office should be moved to Independence, and then there would be an opportunity to get at the facts. In San Francisco there is a concern styled the International Immigrant Union; Manager, W. H. Martin. This man Martin appears to be all there is of the International Immigrant Union. He came to Owens valley about two years ago; examined the country; went to the Land Office, which was then at Bodie; made some entries under the Desert Land Act; got township plats of Owens valley and then returned to San Francisco. He marked the plats all over and alleged that these markings represented his entries. He advertised some in the Western States and scattered a great many circulars descriptive of Owens valley; these circulars being extracts taken from a pamphlet on the resources of Inyo county.

Many people in search of land applied to to him; to these he showed his township plats and told them they could get land only through him. He charged a commission of one-quarter of a dollar on each acre of land located, and as but few new comers to the State appear to have any knowledge of the land laws, he reaped considerable gain. He claimed to be largely interested in canals that were being built to carry water on to these lands; told many that the canals were far advanced and water would soon be upon the lands. The truth is that he never spent a quarter of a dollar toward building a canal in Owens valley; and many of the sections he pretends to control are above the line of any canal yet projected in the valley, or that in all probability ever will be projected. He never has spent one cent toward getting water on to the tracts located by him under the Desert Land Act, and at the expiration of three years from the date of entry he will not have even the shadow of a claim to any locations he may have made in Owens valley. In the meantime very desirable settlers, intelligent, industrious and well-to-do men, stand ready to locate upon the lands claimed by Martin, and would spend money freely to put these lands in the best state of cultivation. But these men will not pay a blackmail tribute to any one.

Commissioner Sparks, of the General Land Office, has proven himself the fearless opponent of every land swindler; and as all the transactions of Martin in Owens valley bear the marks of fraud, the chances are that he will cancel the entries made by Martin as soon as the facts are brought to his knowledge.

Martin once wrote to a party in Owens valley, and asserted that he had an arrangement with the officers of the Land Office at Bodie. According to this arrangement, when an application was received at that office for the entry of land in Owens valley, the applicant was to be informed that the land was already entered by Martin, and that the proposed locator could only get it by paying a bonus of a quarter of a dollar per acre to Martin. It is not at all likely that there is one word of truth in this statement, or that the late officers of the Land Office would be guilty of such a criminal compact. But proof enough can be furnished at any time that such a letter was received from Martin, and that it contained such statements.

All the miners in the southern end of the county are doing well, everybody down there is making money.

Abraham Diaz, the Administrator of the estate of Rafael Diaz, deceased, having filed his petition herein, duly verified, praying for an order of sale of certain part of the real estate of said deceased, for the purposes therein set forth. It is therefore ordered by the Judge of said Court, that all persons interested in the estate of said deceased, appear before the said Superior Court on Monday, the twenty-fifth day of April, 1887, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the Court Room of said Superior Court, at the Court House, or at the Methodist Church, if the Court be there holden, in the town of Independence, in the County of Inyo, to show cause why an order should not be granted to the said Administrator to sell so much of the real estate of the said deceased, at private sale, as shall be necessary; and that a copy of this order be published at least four successive weeks in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper printed and published in said Inyo County.

Dated March 25th, 1887.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.
JOHN C. EVANS, Stoutland, Mo., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take as much labor off of men as the Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house. If they had to take the Reapers from under their wife and babies to pay for it."
JOHN R. DODGE, JR., jeweler, Neosho, Ills., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. Ist. It is the best machine ever invented by man. 2d. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. 3d. If you run short, you can not buy corn for grist."
I will ship a sample to those desiring an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best washer in the world for saving labor, clothes and soap. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.

INYO COUNTY—Owens River Valley
THE INTERNATIONAL IMMIGRANT UNION intends to colonize the Valley of Owens River, Inyo county, one of the prettiest valleys in the great west, containing about 100,000 acres and well adapted to the growth of wheat and other cereals, as well as of the various fruits. The soil is about the same as the best ever known in California or Oregon, and the facilities for irrigation unsurpassed.
The Company offers to locate settlers upon 80, 160, 320 and 640 acre farms, the settlers paying the same from the Government at $1.50 per acre under the Desert Land Act, paying for it the same 50 cents per acre upon filing his or her application, and the balance, $1 per acre, at the end of three years, or before if water is brought upon the land in sufficient quantity to irrigate the same. Any person, man or woman, 21 years of age, can locate a tract of 640 acres.

IS THERE ANY HOPE?

NEW AND IMPORTANT OPINIONS OF PULMONARY EXPERTS!

Can the Universal Consumption be Successfully Treated.

Dr. Borgeon, a leading French doctor, has a new treatment for consumption!

He gives an enema of carbonic acid and sulphuretted hydrogen gases, the latter gas carrying the former into every part of the throat and lungs.

What this cause is has been stated by perhaps the highest pulmonary authority in the world, i. e., the Brompton Hospital for Consumptives, in London, Eng.

This malady every year carries off from one seventh to one-fifth of the entire population of England!

Dr. Payne, M. D., M. R. C. P., London, is authority for this statement.

The same or a greater proportion of deaths obtains in America.

Dr. Payne also says that one-half the total number of deaths from all other causes have seeds of this disease in the system which only require some irritant to develop!

Dr. Herman Brehmer, an eminent German authority, says that consumption is caused by deficient nutrition of the lungs, by poor blood.

These authorities cannot be disputed. The medical world recognizes them. The uric acid is the irritant in the blood that causes the development of the seeds which Dr. Brehmer says lie dormant in the blood.

Every particle of blood which passes through the lungs and heart, also goes through the kidneys, and if they are in the least deranged they cannot rid the blood of its killing poison. The thousand little heir-like sewer tubes of the kidneys very easily get blocked up and diseased; and when they do, they corrupt instead of purifying the blood. Kidney disease may exist, and yet no pain occur in that organ, because it is deficient in nerves of sensation.

Dip your finger in acid every day and it soon festers and is destroyed. Send acid poisoned blood through the lungs every second, and they soon give way.

The Brompton Hospital investigation showed that 52 per cent. of the victims of consumption were afflicted with deranged kidneys, which permitted the uric acid poison to remain in the blood and irritate the lungs. This uric acid is always fighting every vital organ, and if there be any inherent weakness in the lungs it inevitably causes pneumonia, cough and consumption.

The real cause of pulmonary troubles being so authoritatively shown to be faulty even though unsuspected action of the kidneys, explains why, in order to master the dreaded consumption, one must rid the blood of the uric acid irritant which inflames and burns up the lung substance. For this purpose there is nothing equal to that great specific, Warner's safe cure. This remedy has now the favor of medical men all over the world purely on its merits. We have no doubt that if the kidneys are kept in natural action, consumption and a great many other diseases, caused by uric-acid, will not only be cured but will be prevented.

When the kidney is healthy, no albumen appears in the water, but albumen is found in the water of more than half of those who die of consumption!

This, then, is the condition of things that always precedes consumption: First, weakened kidneys; second, retained uric acid, poisoning the blood; third, the development of disease in the lungs by the irritant acids passing through them. Then there is a little cough in the morning; soon thick, yellow matter is spit up, followed by loss of flesh and strength, with dreadful night sweats; and when the patient goes to his school physician for help, he is put on cod liver oil which his stomach weakened also by uric acid in the blood, cannot digest. Because there is no pain present in the kidneys, the patient does not think they are affected, but the kidney acid is doing its work every minute, every hour, day and night, and by-and-by the disease of the lungs has advanced until pus is developed, then come hemorrhages, and at last the glassy stare which denotes that the end is near!

A post-mortem examination of such cases shows that the terrible uric acid has completely destroyed the substance of the lung.

Breathing through the open mouth is practiced for the most part only by "civilized" men. The aborigines of our country, and savage tribes elsewhere, always keep the mouth tightly closed and breathe through the nostrils. Nature is a wiser teacher than fashion, for the primitive method of breathing is the best one on every principle of hygiene. There is danger of severe injury to the bronchial tubes and to the delicate vessels of the lungs, in passing from the warm air of a house to an atmosphere in the neighborhood of zero, if the air is taken directly into the lungs. By passing it through the nostrils the chill is removed, and the shock from the sudden change escaped.

Yet our readers will remember that Lieutenant Schwatka said that in the most intense cold of the Arctic regions, one must usually breathe through the mouth.

If the modern germ theory of the origin of infectious diseases is true, breathing through the nostrils is one of nature's safeguards. The hairs, which line the entrance to the nostrils, may arrest the germs floating in the air and prevent their passage to the lungs, and consequent absorption by the blood. Parents ought to teach their children early to breathe only through the nostrils.—Youth's Companion.

—Prof. Ordway recommends that water pipes exposed to freezing be covered with glazed cotton batting. It is easily applied, and should be put on to the thickness of one to three inches, according to exposure, being wound around loosely with twine.—N. Y. Sun.

AN INTERVIEW WITH DICKENS.

The Advice the Great Author Gave an Ambitious Young Newspaper Reporter.

In a musty little dressing room just off the stage of St. James' hall, in Buffalo, Charles Dickens gave an ambitious young newspaper reporter his first lesson in interviewing. That was more than twenty years ago and during Mr. Dickens' last visit to this country. The great novelist gave two public readings in Buffalo, and on the day after his first reading in that city he went to Niagara Falls with a party of friends. It was to obtain his "impressions" of the falls that the ambitious young reporter sought Mr. Dickens a few minutes before the raising of the curtain on his second night's entertainment. As luck would have it the distinguished author was alone in the dressing room. He was sitting at a rude pine table reading a newspaper by the light of a sputtering candle.

"What is it, young man?" he said, somewhat gruffly, as soon as he became aware of the reporter's presence.

"I am a reporter for The Buffalo Express," said the intruder, with forced calmness.

"Yes, yes! well, what is it?" exclaimed Mr. Dickens, in a tone so freezing that the reporter shivered and instinctively turned toward the door in expectation of an admonition to "Get out!"

"None of your"—began the famous novelist with rising asperity.

"I beg your pardon, excuse me; I thought"—nervously interjected the reporter, as he edged toward the door.

"Wait a moment. Come here!" Mr. Dickens' demeanor and tone had changed completely. The reporter looked up in surprise. The expression of annoyance in the face of the novelist had given way to one of amused interest. "So you were sent to interview me, were you?" said he pleasantly. "Well, I hope you will excuse my candor in saying that your paper could not have sent a person less likely to succeed, even if I were willing to be interviewed, which I am not. My young friend let me give you a word of advice. When you want to interview a man don't act as if you were afraid of him, and don't throw a net at him as though you were seeking a fish in invisible depths. No man whose opinions are worth publishing will respond to a wholesale invitation to unbosom himself. Don't ask weak or frivolous questions! You must have an intelligent plan of campaign when you go interviewing. First of all you must know just what you want to say and your questions must be sufficiently incisive to awaken the interest of the person to whom they are addressed. Once you get a man interested in a subject it will require only a little ingenuity to keep him talking. After what I have seen to-day I cannot help feeling an interest in Niagara Falls, but if you will excuse me for saying so, you lack the ingenuity to set me talking on the subject. I wish you well, however. Good night."

Mr. Dicken's "impressions" of Niagara Falls were not printed in any Buffalo newspaper the next day, but his pithy remarks on the subject of interviewing were printed on the tablets of that young reporter's memory—in red ink, as it were.—New York Times.

Cockroaches on the Race Course.

"Bet you $10 on my bug!"

"Five to two on the little 'un!"

Such were the cries that greeted the ears of a reporter as he passed the door of a Cadillac square saloon and caused him to turn back and enter. It was a curious sight that met his eyes. On the floor were drawn two concentric circles with chalk, one six, the other about twelve feet in diameter. Within the inner circle stooped two men who held each a teacup, bottom upward, on the floor, their rims in contact and as near the middle of the circle as possible. Between the inner and outer circle stood a flashily dressed man with an open watch in his hand and without the outer circle were eighteen or twenty excited spectators.

"Are you ready?" asked the man with the watch.

"We are," answered they of the cups.

"One, two, three, go!" said the timekeeper.

The two men in the inner circle simultaneously raised the cups and stepped beyond the line, revealing two cockroaches, one considerably larger than the other. The bugs seemed at first to be thoroughly confused, running about in circles and darting first in one direction and then in another. Suddenly, however, the smaller roach took a bee line toward the bar and crossed the chalk line while the other insect was still seeking its bearings. The greatest confusion prevailed, as each trainer deftly covered his roach with a cup and secured it, the captor of the smaller one exclaiming:

"Three out of five and the money is mine."—Detroit Free Press.

A Lucky Decorative Idea.

One of the most successful "fakes" ever worked in the artistic line was by a young Pittsburg engraver in Chicago. He was out of money and out of work. It was several years ago, just at the beginning of the decorative art craze. One day he was passing a shell store with a friend when an idea struck him. He was considerable of an artist as well as an engraver. He went in and proposed to the proprietor to take some of the shells and paint a little landscape in each and sell them for mantel ornaments.

The shrewd old proprietor said that the thing would catch the popular fancy and finally arranged to pay $1 a piece for painting them. They took a dozen of the shells home and the pictures suited the old man. The shell paintings had a great sale, and in the next three months the artists made a little over $1,200, and didn't work very hard either. At the end of that period competition cut the price in half again and they went out of the business, but it was a great snap for the amateurs while it lasted.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Depreciation of English Land.

The depreciation in the value of English land is witnessed by one or two statements published last week. We are, in the first place, told that within a radius of twelve miles around Louth, in Lincolnshire, there are now 22,400 acres of land without tenants. In the same shire the largest farm in England has been thrown on the owner's hands. It is 2,700 acres in extent and the tenant paid £1 per acre. This year a reduction of 50 per cent. was made to him, but finding, although an experienced and energetic farmer, that even at this reduction he could not make two ends meet, he has thrown up his farm.—London Court Journal.

The Siamese Way.

In the simplicity of its doctoring methods few nations are much in advance of the Siamese. A great number of diseases are popularly supposed to be the result of spirit possession. The doctor in charge of a case of this kind ties a string around the room in view of the patient, decorates it with pieces of paper containing mysterious hieroglyphics, and then, brandishing a knife, commands the spirit to come out. Clay images are also used for the spirits to enter, and when satisfied that they have done so, the images are wheeled out of town upon carts. When the patient is convinced that the evil spirit has left his mind becomes tranquilized, and he stands a better chance for recovery.—Herald of Health

LANGUAGE OF LEGS.

WHAT THE VARIOUS POSTURES ASSUMED IN PUBLIC INDICATE.

A Physiognomist Studies Human Nature in a Street Car—Curious Indications of Disposition and Character—Movements of the Eyelids.

"Did you notice that old man who just went past?" asked a young doctor the other day. "Well, he will sit with his right leg crossing the left."

"Why, what do you mean?"

"Nothing much. Only that any observer can tell what leg a man will cross by the way he wears his clothing."

"You don't mean to say that you know from the appearance of a person how they cross their feet?" I inquired.

"Yes, that's it. You don't believe it? Well, come with me. We'll take a short ride on a street car, and I'll prove my assertion to be true."

A few moments later saw me aboard a car, the sole occupant being a German woman with a basket.

"She don't count?" I suggested, inquiringly.

"Oh, yes. You can tell women just as well as men. She will put the left foot over the right." Almost before he had finished, as if to prove the truth of his statement, the left broad shoe was slowly put over the right.

ANALYZING A SUBJECT.

"There's a subject for us," he continued, as a thin young man with an immense walking cane entered the door. "Look how neatly his coat fits; see how his silk hat shines; observe his polished boots. You will notice the height of his collar and his spotless linen. All right now. That man will pull his pantaloons gently at the knee, and then with care cross the right leg over the left."

It was getting rather interesting, and it was with delight I welcomed another passenger. He was fair and fat, but more than forty. His ruddy, over hanging cheeks rivaled his scanty locks in the fashionable tint, "town red." His weight was something remarkable, judged from the space he occupied, but, despite this fact, he dropped but one fare in the box.

"A cherub, eh?" said the physiognomist. "Now, that man is lazy. See how limp his collar is, and how unclean his cuffs. Even the age of slobbering is not past, which is responsible for those marks on his coat. Now, one glance is sufficient to show that he will use great work to get the left leg over the right. See him? It's a difficult task, but he imagines that it is as nicely crossed as any man's can be.

"You will find the majority of people are not over neat about their appearance. While they may be cleanly enough, they haven't much pride in the fit of their clothing; consequently, most people give the preference to the left foot. It is even noticeable by the hands. See our fat man; see how snugly he crosses the right hand with the left. It's the most interesting study one can have, the study of human nature. I practice at it continually. I have taught myself to read people's thoughts."

THE STUDENT CONTINUES.

The car by this time was comfortably filled. Along the opposite side, with the exception of the old man, the left leg was crossing the right. One woman out of the four female passengers crossed right, and if appearance counts for aught I could have told it would be so.

"Another thing I have studied," continued this student of human nature, "and that is the movement of the eyelids. If I want to tell a woman's temper I watch her eyelids. You can read a man in the same way, but not so readily. A woman with a fiery temper will move her eyelids with a snap, and that snap betrays her. Another who is easy going and hard to arouse moves her eyelids languidly. One with a quick brain and a temper furious when aroused justly winks steadily, but neither quickly nor slowly until engaged in interesting conversation. Even bright thoughts will cause her eyelids to move with rapidity and show the state of the brain as well as her temper.

"Why do I study these human points? you ask. In the first place, because it is interesting to me, and next, because it is useful for a man in public life to have an insight into human nature. When we have learned just such little things as these we can more quickly tell the men or women we come in contact with, which is always an advantage. Clothing, hats, seal sacques, even a place where a button should be, partakes of the character of the wearer and tells a student as plain as print with whom he has to deal."—New York Journal.

An Esquiman Dog Team.

"I am told that there is to be an Esquiman dog team at the carnival," said Mr. J. H. Hubbard, who had charge of the Canadian game trophy at the Colonial exhibition. "It would be a splendid attraction if they have a good team." "Is it not your team that is to be exhibited?" asked a reporter. "No," was the reply. "Mine were stuffed, and I have left them in England. It was the same team which conveyed Maj. Jarvis right through from Fort Churchill, and their reward on arriving at Winnipeg was to be poisoned by prussic acid and stuffed for exhibition. I have the harness here with me." "How many dogs do they usually have to a team?" was the next question. "There are usually four, but very often six or eight. It would not do, however, to have more than four in a team to be driven through the streets, as with the bands of music, the noise and the crowd of people they would be hard to manage.

"The best dog is a cross between a wolf and a collie slut. They are not savage, but on the contrary are very devoted to the man who feeds them. They are very peculiar in this respect. A man may drive a team five years and feed them every night, but if he sells them, the buyer feeds them, and thereupon he becomes their boss. They give implicit obedience to the man who feeds them last. Good dogs are worth from $25 to $50. They used to be employed in drawing fish from Lake Winnipeg into the town, and are often used yet by the Indians who come in on treaty days for their pay. When the Indians have their sun dance they kill and eat the oldest and most worthless of the dogs, for it would never do to have a dance without a meal of roast dog afterward. The Stonies never do this, but the Crees, the Sioux and some other tribes do."—Montreal Gazette.

Not All Satisfied.

"And so your dear Uncle David is dead? Was he sick long?" "Not a great while, but he was a great sufferer. Everything, however, was done for him that was possible." "Then, of course, you are all satisfied with his medical treatment?" "Oh, yes; that is to say, all of us except Cousin John. Uncle David didn't leave John anything but the family Bible."—Boston Transcript.

Ancient Egyptian Gold Plate.

The only piece of gold plate ever found in Egypt, now on its way to the Museum of Fine Arts, is the massive handle to a tray used in the royal service of Pharaoh Hophra, at the biblical Tahpanhes (Jeremiah x, 3), to which place came Jeremiah, who doubtless here wrote his "Lamentations," with the fugitive princesses of Judah. The plate is among the gifts of the Egypt exploration fund, which disclosed this most interesting sight where Nebuchadnezzar burned the palace or castle because Hophra had received the fugitives.—Home Journal.

FARMING IN CALIFORNIA.

How the Owners of Wheat Ranches and Vineyards Conduct Their Business.

The great staple product of California is wheat, of which about fifty million bushels, worth more than forty millions of dollars, are raised in a good year, four-fifths of which are exported. This wheat is almost wholly raised on large ranches by contract. The wheat-grower is no more a farmer than he is a miner or a miller. He lets out his plowing and seeding by the acre, and borrows money from the banks to pay the bill, giving security on the growing crop. In harvest-time a contractor comes on the ground with his harvesters, threshers and separators, an outfit costing as much as five thousand dollars. He brings his own crew of twenty to twenty-five men, who move from place to place, living like gypsies in the open air. They gather in the broad fields of grain at the rate of more than one thousand bushels per day, and leave the crop neatly piled up in sacks, to which the rancher has not put his hand from first to last. More money is borrowed from the banks at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month to pay for the harvesting, and some time or any time, before the rainy season begins, the sacks are carted either to the river or railroad, and sent to market.

The rancher is to all intents and purposes a capitalist, or, perhaps, a manufacturer dependent upon the capitalist, and, unless his operations are conducted on a sufficiently extensive scale, the margin of profit is hardly enough to keep him in idleness during the greater part of the year. Every wheat-grower in California is not of this sort, but every well-informed person will recognize the characteristics of a class sufficiently numerous to afford a basis for distinct and peculiar methods of business, both as regards contracts, transportation and finances. It is to the thrifty wheat-grower that the employment of the Chinaman becomes a necessity if he would vary his husbandry, and avail himself fully of the season's opportunities. In planting, weeding and digging, the Chinaman excels, and the testimony of many a rancher is that without Chinese labor his farming would not be successful.

In grape culture the common practice in the State is wasteful. Early in March the plow is put in among the vines to remove weeds that careful culture would never have permitted to grow. The weeds come out, and so do all the tender roots near the surface. During the summer the vines are commonly allowed to run until they cover the ground with shoots from ten to fifteen feet long; then there is a spasm of pruning and they are all cut back just at the time when the whole strength of the foliage is required to mature the juices in the rapidly swelling fruit. The common price for grapes is from twenty to thirty dollars per ton, according to variety and quality, and the grower has so little margin for profit that he can only employ industrious and steady laborers at small wages. As a consequence, the most successful grape-growers are compelled to employ Chinamen in their vineyards. Generally the more successful the man, the more Chinamen he employs; their wages are from twenty to twenty-five dollars per month without board.—Youth's Companion.

An Adjustment of Differences.

Valerie Villemer (Vassar, '87)—But, auntie, all the researches of modern science convince us that evolution is the only theory to which we can attach any confidence. Admirable Aunt—Well, my dear, if you won't disturb my ancestors in the Garden of Eden, I will promise not to feed peanuts to yours at the zoological garden.—Harvard Lampoon.

HOW NOT TO BE SICK.

To fight disease away, and keep it out, is, in a nut-shell, the solution of the whole mystery. To this end activity, vitality and health go together. When malaria and consumption make their attacks the system has been enfeebled and is therefore ready to be damaged by them. The weakened system needs a vitalizer. Such a help to health is found in Compound Oxygen, a remedy which has achieved its most conspicuous triumphs in building up the feeble, restoring the prostrated, and driving out deep-seated chronic maladies which had threatened the destruction of their victims. The way in which Compound Oxygen does its work is plain and simple. There are no drugs to swallow; no annoying experiences to be endured; but through it the circulation, the digestive organs and the whole system receive new life, and thus acquire power to throw off disease and to resist new attacks. To follow up this interesting subject procure from Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, of 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, the treatise which they send by mail to any applicant free of charge.

Orders for the Compound Oxygen Home Treatment will be filled by H. A. Mathews, 615 Powell Street, San Francisco.

A GENIAL RESTORATIVE.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are emphatically a genial restorative. The changes which this great botanic remedy produces in the disordered organization are always agreeably, though surely progressive, never abrupt, and violent. On this account it is admirably adapted to persons of delicate constitution and weak nerves to whom the powerful mineral drugs are positively injurious. That it initiates those processes which result in the re-establishment of healthful vigor is conspicuously shown in cases where it is taken to overcome that fruitful cause of debility, indigestion, coupled, as it usually is, with biliousness and constipation. Thorough digestion, regular evacuation and abundant secretion, are results which promptly and invariably attend its systematic use. It is, besides, the best protective against malaria, and a first rate diuretic.

THE BEST

FOR TABLE USE. FOR DAIRY USE.

It is more highly refined than any Salt. All harmful ingredients found in most Salt are removed; therefore it is the safest to use.

It is free from lime and pan scales, requires no sifting. It is the strongest and altogether the most economical.

It dissolves very easily, therefore does not spoil butter by the gritty particles, as often happens with other Salt.

Common Salt is too risky for anybody to use in making Butter. The poorest families use so little Salt on their table that they can afford to get that which is the most healthy and the best.

HOLMES' EXTRA SIFTED SALT is used by the best dairymen in California, and has never failed to please better than any other brand whenever tried.

Packed in 230, 100 and 50 pound Pure Linen Bags; also in 5 pound Cotton Bags and Cartons.

A MISER'S PET DOG.

How a Terrier Mourns the Death of a Master Missed by No Human Friend.

Rover, the old canine friend and companion of miser Joe Perry, lonely and broken-hearted, keeps a faithful watch in the silent yard of his dead master's house on Locust street. Hour by hour, day and night, he lies watching the time-worn door and whines and paws at its rotten boards. But it doesn't open as it was wont to do at his lightest scratch. He whines out his grief as he used to bark his opinions at neighboring curs. It would have been a charitable ending if old Rover had been found dead in the little back room with the old miser and his partner. The woman who keeps the grocery store next door to the house of gold and filth pushes food to the dog through a hole in the fence every day, but Rover seldom touches it and is daily growing weaker. The little terrier has a stubby tail, short legs and a shaggy coat of sorrel color hair. He was a pup when given to Perry a number of years ago.

Rover was the only living thing that shared the miser's fullest confidence. When Perry would leave the house to collect a debt or visit a liquor saloon Rover was generally trotting by his side. If the miser should go away without Rover it would not be long before the dog would discover the absence of his master and start to search for him. The terrier was well known in the neighborhood.

While looking for Perry he would peep into the near-by groggeries and if the miser was not to be found in the saloons the dog would soon be scratching the door of old John McGough's house. If he found Perry he would jump about him, paw his legs and give unmistakable evidence that he wanted him to come home. If Perry was ready he would follow the dog, but should his talk of avarice be not complete he would tell Rover to go and make a tour among the garbage buckets of the alleys. And Rover would go and do as directed. Some times the dog would find Perry in one of the saloons buying his daily supply of rum. If the miser lingered too long Rover would show his impatience by tugging at the tattered trousers of the recluse.

On several occasions the hoarding auctioneer got a burdensome load of bad whisky aboard and was helped to his door by colored men, who repaid themselves by relieving the miser of his silver time-piece and its shoe-string chain, but it never happened while the terrier was around.

There is a pear tree in the yard and when this was bearing its fruit, then was the time that little Rover had to be vigilant. He was not only faithful and sagacious but cunning. Two years ago an eight-year-old pickaninny was peeping into the yard with his white eyeballs turned wistfully to the pear tree. Rover saw him but pretended that he was asleep, until the darkey stepped in and made for the tree. Then the terrier made a dash for the gate and cut off the frightened lad. The dog barked his loudest and brought out Perry, who caught the robber. But it was unfortunate for the old man, as the pickaninny was vicious and he struck the miser on the head with a stone and made his escape.

Rover was caught by the dog-catchers about two years ago. It was early on a spring morning and the dog was out on a hunt for one of the old men who had slipped away for the matutinal supply of corn-juice. The terrier had been away from the house but a few minutes when he was seen by a dog-catcher on Locust street. Rover made a heroic endeavor to get back home, but the darky and his big net were too much for him and he was soon among whelps, mongrels and curs in the wagon of the pound man. Perry heard the yells of the dog and hurried into the street. He made a piteous appeal for the release of his terrier, but the men refused to free Rover until the owner had paid the fine. After exerting himself for twenty minutes the miser was crushed to find that he couldn't secure a reduction on the fine, but his love for the dog was great and he finally brought out the money and the terrier was released.—Philadelphia Times.

SUICIDE OF ANIMALS.

An Interesting Case of the Kind Reported by a Noted Savant.

I am disinclined to believe in deliberate intention of suicide in so-called "animals," for one reason among others, because I think if they were capable of entertaining the idea they would take advantage of it so often, to be rid of the miseries the human animal inflicts on them, that the present doubt would not exist. Would not half the cab-horses crawl into the Thames, and would not high-spirited mongrels devise means of being beforehand with the policeman's truncheon? Nevertheless, I have just been credibly informed of an authentic instance. A gentleman with whom I had a slight acquaintance, residing not many doors from me, went last winter to the south of France on a visit to relations. He was out of health, certainly, but it was quite expected that the change of climate would restore him. His "faithful dog" did not "bear him company," but remained with his wife and friends. The hopes of his recovery proved fallacious, and when the news of his death came it was an unexpected grief. The dog seemed fully to understand the nature of the bereavement, and shared the grief of the family to such an overwhelming extent that one day it went to an upper window and jumped out, killing itself in a very distressing way. I may add the dog was a small terrier. —R. H. Busk, in Notes and Queries.

SHARP CONTRAST.

The Humble Life of Weavers in Olden Times Compared With That of To-Day.

It is sometimes well to take a look back and see what our forefathers used to do in our own line of business. Before the advent of the narrow loom and fancy cassimeres all goods were woven on the old broad hand-loom, which was an immense institution, and usually owned by the weaver and set up in one of his own chambers. It was always accompanied by the old "bobbin wheel" and a large bowl or tub of water in which to wet the filling; the wheel being used to throw out the surplus water, which left each bobbin of filling equally charged with moisture. The bobbins were stacked up in the window until used, sometimes kept covered with a cloth. From fifty to one hundred bobbins were wet at a time. Only one shuttle was used, and that a very heavy one, with two large double wheels underneath and two single wheels on the side that ran against the reed. These wheels used to destroy the reed in time, as the under wheels did the race-board. There was no box motion then. A piece of strong twine was fastened to each picker and brought to the center of the loom and fastened to a handle which the weaver held in his right hand, and with which the shuttle was thrown with great precision while he worked the lay with his left hand and the treadles with his feet. The seat was a two-legged affair fastened to the window-sill, the seat part being at an angle of about forty-five degrees. It could hardly be called a seat, as the weaver stood up while sitting down, as it were. The yarn was let off from the beam by hand, and the cloth taken up in the same way, the arrangement being very crude indeed, but very effective, made so by the skill of the weaver. The cloth was usually woven in the loom eleven or thirteen quarters wide, and, as might be expected, it came from the loom very thin, but felt like a woolen board when full, in which state it was generally sold by the small manufacturer, the purchaser sending it to the finishing-mill.

Besides the single looms in the homes of the weaver there were what were termed "shops," where a large number of looms were run, usually owned by one man, single looms being rented at times. As there was no power there was no bell and no steam heat, the shops being warmed by the crudest kind of stoves. When the short days of the year came, and it was time to light up, they usually had what was called "a lighting-up supper," and in the spring a "blowing-out" supper. Lighting was done with oil in the crudest kind of a lamp, which was made by any tinsmith. The amount of smoke made was fearful. The lamps were open, no glass in any form being used. Coal oil had not been discovered, and lard oil was not the an article of commerce. The weavers were generally a very happy set of men, full of jest, song, and story, and the original wit of some of those men has made the fortune of later imitators.

The weavers were often experts at raising window plants, and many of them could make a good showing at any season of the year. Native song birds were often kept, and there was always some kind of a pet—it may be a dog, cat, or some kind of bird—that was allowed the freedom of the chamber. Money was not very plenty, luxuries were unknown, but a fair share of happiness was secured by the old hand-loom weavers.—Fiber and Fabrics.

THE CHEERFUL FACE.

A Heaven-Born Light Before Which All Dreariness Must Vanish.

Next to the sunlight of heaven is the cheerful face. There is no mistaking it—the bright eye, the unclouded brow, the sunny smile, all tell of that which dwell within. Who has not felt its electrifying influence? One glance at this face lifts us out of the mists and shadows into the beautiful realms of hope. One cheerful face in the household will keep every thing warm and bright within. A host of evil passions may lurk around the door, but they never enter and abide there; the cheerful face will put them to shame and flight. It may be a very plain face, but there is some thing in it we feel, yet can not express; and its cheery smile sends the blood dancing through the veins for every joy. Ah, there is a world of magic in the plain, cheerful face! It charms us with a spell of eternity and we would not exchange it for all the soulless beauty that ever graced the fairest form on earth.

It may be a very little face, but somehow this cherry little face ever shines, and the shining is so bright that the shadows can not remain, and silently they creep away into the dark corners where the pleasant face is gone. It may be a wrinkled face, but it is all the dearer for that, and none the less cheerful. We linger near it, and gaze tenderly upon it, and say: "God bless this dear, happy face!" We must keep it with us as long as we can, for home will lose much of its brightness when this sweet face is gone. And after it is gone, how the remembrance of it softens our wayward natures. When care and sorrow would snap our heart strings asunder, this wrinkled face looks down upon us, and the painful tension grows lighter, the way seems less dreary, and the sorrow less heavy. God bless the cheerful face! What a dreary world this would be without this heaven-born light! And he who has it not should pray for his daily bread.—Home Visitor.

THE COUNTERSIGN.

He was a bearded man and his breath was redolent with cloves and gin. Once upon a time he had endeavored to train his hair into a pompadour and partially succeeded. But only partially, for one-half stood up like undying Truth, while the rest pointed to all directions of the marine compass. He wore a winning smile and evidently intended to captivate his honor with a glance. But his honor wasn't to be captivated and the prisoner soon found it out. Then he started off on a new tack. Laying down his hat softly, he slowly elevated his right hand to his ear and bowed three times solemnly. Then he laid his left hand on his stomach and his right hand on his head and began working them circularly. His honor put on his glasses and looked down solemnly at the prisoner. That individual stepped backward three paces, three more to the left and back again, describing a triangle. In a low voice he whispered:

"Brother, do you recognize the hailing sign?"

His honor nodded and turned over a leaf on the docket. The man at the bar then tapped his forehead three times, and elevated his arms over his head, saying: "The signal of distress, brother." The court merely bowed. "It will be all right, then?" cheerily asked the prisoner. "I suppose I can go. And say, brother, can't you advance a brother fifty cents to relieve his immediate necessities?" His honor took off his glasses and asked: "Mr. Bebee, I recognize your signals, etcetera, but I cannot for the life of me recollect the order; so many, you know."

"I am surprised, brother, greatly surprised," remarked the prisoner. "I never knew a candidate who ever forgot his initiation into the United Order of Benevolent Sons of Good Fellowship of the Temple of Solomon," and he gave the hailing sign with embellishments.

"Ah, yes; I had it mixed up with the Ancient Order of Old Billygoats," exclaimed his honor. "Do you recognize this sign, brother?" and he dipped his pen in the red ink and held it up."

"It isn't in the ritual, is it?" asked the prisoner, as he rubbed his head.

"It means, Mr. Bebee, that the court has dropped onto your little racket," sternly replied his honor. Then picking up a blotter, he waved it in a circle and said: "Does this sign seem familiar to you?"

"Don't recollect it," meekly responded the accused.

"Well, as I interpret it, it means that you get three months. Now give the parting sign to the Most Worthy Tiler and Master of the Guard at the door and pass down."

THE COUNTERSIGN.

And his honor waved his pen and blotter together and John Agamemnon Bebee was seized by Deputy Five and hustled down stairs. There he told the old soldier that the villain up stairs would be assassinated by the avenging angels of the U. O. of B. S. of G. F. of the T. of S., Chapter Nine, Encampment of the Ohio Valley.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Saved by a Bluff.

Lord O——, an Englishman, was a very rough and imperious man, also quite deaf. He was riding along one day in a post chaise, asleep, when he was stopped by a robber on horseback, who awoke him. "What do you want?" said Lord O——, angrily. "Money, my lord." "What money? Are you a robber? Are you the rascal who has just awoke me so suddenly?" "Come, be quick!" said the highwayman; "I have no time to lose; I must have your purse." "My purse!" exclaimed Lord O——; "indeed, you shall not have it. Really, you carry on a fine trade!" He pulled out his purse, which was full, and with his finger and thumb deliberately took out two guineas, which he gave to the robber. "There, that's enough for a scoundrel like you! I hope to see you hanged some of these days!" Lord O—— coolly put up his purse, still calling him a rascal and a scoundrel, and repeating that he hoped to see him hanged soon. The robber was so much awed by the other's manner that he did not venture to insist on his demand for the purse, though he had a pistol in his hand to enforce it, and Lord O—— drove on.—New York Star.

All There is About Cows.

Here is Laura's composition on the cow: 'A cow is an animal with four legs on the under side. The tail is longer than the legs, but it's not used to stand on. The cow kills flies with her tail. A cow has big ears that wriggle on hinges; so does the tail. A cow is bigger than a calf, but not as big as an elephant. She is made small so she can go in the barn door when nobody is looking. Some cows are black and some hook. A dog was hooked once. She tossed the dog that worried the cat that killed the rat. Black cows give white milk; so does other cows. Milkmen sell milk to buy their little girls' dresses, which they put water in and chalk. Cows chew cuds and each cow finds its own chew. This is all there is about cows.—Wide Awake.

Why the Chickens Came Out.

An anecdote is told of a little fellow who, on turning over the leaves of a scrap book, came across the well known picture of some chickens just out of their shell. "My companion examined the picture carefully and then, with a grave, sagacious look at me, slowly remarked, 'They came out 'cos they was afraid of being boiled.'".—Wide Awake.

TALENTED BUT LAZY.

The Unlovely Sight Presented by a Young Woman Who Shirks Her Duties.

The town is full of talented girls who will never amount to any thing because they are so well content with simply being talented. These girls will never be able to take a prominent place in any profession or circle in society because they lack the industry without which all the talent under the sun is not worth a copper groat. Talent is the unhewn block of marble, industry is the chisel that may convert it to the perfect statue. The philosophic writer of "Our Picayunes" says that industry beats genius at every thing except the making of real poetry. Talented girls who are too lazy to accomplish any thing except by inspiration are often not only the victims of their own false idea that talent is better than a developed muscle, or trained mind, or methodical work, but of the ill-advised praise of relatives and friends. A smart girl wants encouragement, not merely praise. She wants that sort of encouragement that if she wills to work she can be and do any thing that is great, and noble, and possible to human endeavor. Many a smart girl remains a slouch and a smatterer all her days because of the exaggerated ideas of her own ability, not capability, she receives from those who should have known better. A talented girl of eighteen can play the piano; but not well enough to keep the honest attention of a roomful of people. She can dabble in paints, but not well enough to make her pictures worth framing. She can write romances, but none good enough for publication. These are her possibilities. They speak fairly well of her at eighteen, and friends predict a brilliant future for her. But at nineteen and twenty she neither plays, nor paints, nor writes any better than she did at eighteen. She has spent her days in idle, ambitious dreamings of what she would like to do. Her mind runs sluggishly, she is drunk with the stupor of laziness. She is an enormous reader of novels, but finds even the magazines "too solemn" for her mind and taste. Victimized by home adulation, she has quit her piano-practicing, neglected her studies, abandoned her drawing-book, and she ends by doing nothing at all. Her mother has loved her too well to allow her to make a bed, sweep a room, keep up any routine of duties or studies, and the result is a failure. Admiring friends fall off, sorry and disgusted. A lazy young woman is as unlovely a sight as a slovenly one. A girl of eighteen, a talented girl, needs at her elbow a mother or a guardian who shall unceasingly and earnestly inspire her with an ambition to take always and ever an upward step.—N. O. Picayune.

PETTY VANDALISM.

Defacement of the Yellowstone Geysers by Shallow-Minded Visitors.

It is a pity that the wonderful natural attractions of the Yellowstone National Park can not be preserved from vandal hands for future generations. From the report of Captain Moses Harris to the Secretary of the Interior, it would seem that the geysers of the Yellowstone, as well as the game, needs protection.

"It is apparent from the most casual observation that the means heretofore employed for the preservation of the natural objects of wonder and beauty in the Park have been entirely inadequate. It may be said without exaggeration that not one of the notable geyser formations in the Park has escaped mutilation or defacement in some form. Those that have been most fortunate are covered with lead-pencil inscriptions, recording the names of those shallow-minded visitors to whom such a distinction is a pleasure. A lead-pencil mark seems to be a very harmless defacement, but names bearing date of 1880 are still discoverable through the thin deposit of silica, and if this marking should go on unchecked, in a very few years these once beautiful formations will have become unsightly and unattractive objects. At the Upper Geyser Basin, names with date of June, 1886, have been chiseled into the solid geyserite so deep, that, in the slow process of nature, many years must elapse before this mutilation will be obliterated. Not content with the defacement of the formations, efforts are constantly being made to destroy the geysers themselves, by throwing into them sticks, logs of wood and all sorts of obstructions. The eruptive force of several of the geysers has been totally destroyed by vandalism of this character. The foot-steps of the throngs of visitors are wearing away the delicate, and lace-like tracery of the silicious deposits, and in a few years the formations surrounding the geysers will present the appearance of the worn pavements of a city street. The willful defacement of the beautiful objects can only be prevented by watchful supervision, supported by the rigid enforcement of lawful penalties. A certain amount of wear and deterioration, incident to the multitude of visitors, is probably unavoidable."—Golden Rule.

Gratitude means dot we feel tickled so long as we are getting something for nothing. When it vhas der odder feller's turn we kick.

Much dot der world readily accepts as wisdom vhas only assurance mit a sheap coat of plating.

Might should make right, but it vhas better to loose your case dan to engage in a kicking match mit a mule.

While we like to see our neighbor get along und prosper, it vhas pretty hardt to forgif der aunt who dies und leafs him a legacy.

If we can pass a punched quarter off on a street-car conductor dis world vhas full of honest men. If dot conductor sticks us mit a lead nickel we no longer haf confidence in any man's integrity.

If some poor man dies der question vhas: "Vhen shall he be buried?" If some rich man dies eaferybody asks: "Can dey proke his will?"

If you like to see how generous a man really vhas, elect him to some place where he can vote avhay odder people's money.

If you like to keep your friends, keep your money where dey can't get it. Der man who borrows of you und can't pay feels dot you haf wronged him.

MONOTONOUS SPELLING.

T. W. Higginson is credited with telling a racy anecdote in regard to James Russell Lowell. According to Mr. Higginson, one of the Adirondack guides expresses the opinion that Mr. Lowell is "an ignorant cuss," and backs up the characterization with this bill of particulars:

"Well, I was out with him in a canoe, and we were going down stream with the current, and making first-rate time, and he didn't know any better than to insist that we should go over to the other side of the stream just to get in the shade of the bank out of the sun; and we didn't get ahead at all. Now I call a man that don't know enough to take advantage of the current in a canoe a blamed ignoramus."

This same critical Adirondack guide, or one of his professional brethren, figures in another story, which is also told at the expense of Mr. Lowell's intelligence. Said the guide in question to a gentleman whom he met in the woods and who mentioned that he came from Boston:

"Do you know Lowell?"

"What's his first name?"

"Jim."

"Do you refer to James Russell Lowell, the poet?"

"Yes, that's him."

"Oh, yes, I know Mr. Lowell very well, and admire him greatly."

"Well, I took to him, too, but [with regret in his tone] he's got one mighty sing'lar habit."

"To what do you refer?"

"Well, he's written me several letters, off and on, when he's been comin' up here, and he's a monotonous speller."

"A what?"

"A monotonous speller. I've always noticed that in his letters to me Lowell spells his words the same way ev'ry time—I never do."—Chicago Tribune.

Willie Took the Hint.

Willie A—— and Maggie B—— had been busy courting for two years, meeting regularly every Wednesday night in Hope street, Glasgow. About a fortnight ago Willie, in parting with his beloved, made the usual remark:

"I'll meet you in Hope street next Wednesday night. Mind and be punctual."

"Deed ay, Willie, lad," replied Meg, wi' a merry twinkle in her e'e, "we hae met a lang time noo in Hope street, and I wis jist that it was nigh time we were shifting our trysting place further alang. What wad you say to Union street!" Willie has taken the hint and invitations are out.—Scottish American.

Something to Remember.

A mother had reproved her little girl for being so clumsy as to drop a dish, and the little girl, after a thoughtful silence, said:

"Mamma, can you write with your left hand?"

"I could if I were left-handed, but I'm not."

BIRDS' NEST SOUP.

A Chinese Delicacy Which, According to Darwin, Consists of Dried Saliva.

An American swift—ahead, as usual, of the effete British representatives of the family—constructs its nest of small twigs, glued together by a brownish mucilage, almost as copious as that of the edible species, but not quite so clear or pure or jelly-like. This Yankee bird's nest swells and softens in warm water exactly like the genuine article, but it has not so far been employed for cookery by the heathen Chinee of Chicago and San Francisco. In time, no doubt, it will be duly exploited by some intelligent American Francatelli, and bird's nest soup will delight the palate of diners at Delmonico's as it already delights the almond-eyed gourmets of Pekin and Yokohama. The true edible bird's nest swiftlet is a native of Ceylon and of the Malay region, and it builds in caves where materials for architecture are necessarily scanty or on sea cliffs of inaccessible height. More than most other swifts this tropical species is a confirmed highflyer, hawking for its food around the summits of the mountains and much indisposed to settle on the ground upon any pretext. Hence it has learned to carry to the furtherest possible limit the family habit of making a nest quite literally "all out of its own head," without the slightest extraneous aid of any sort. The best and cleanest nests, which fetch the highest price, are composed entirely of pure mucous from the salivary glands. The material in its hardened state is brittle, fibrous, white and transparent, "very like pure gum arabic, or even glass;" and the inner lining consists of nothing but small soft feathers. Inferior nests, which command a smaller price in the Chinese market, are composed in part of dry grasses, hair and down, welded together by the fibrous gummy secretion. In short, as Mr. Darwin bluntly puts it: "The Chinese make soup of dried saliva." This sounds horrid enough, to be sure; but when we ourselves give up coloring jellies with defunct cochineal insects, it will be time for us to cast the first stone at the Oriental cuisine. In shape the nests are much like hanging pouches glued on to the wall of the cave by their own mucous, and containing each two eggs. All the swifts, indeed, are very small layers, as is invariably the case with the most active animals; the laziest livers have (other things equal) the largest families. The "take" is in October, and most of the nests go to China, where the soup ranks as a high luxury. I tasted some in Paris a few years since, and do not find it by any means unpalatable; but how much of the effect was due to the nests themselves, and how much to the skillful manipulation of the Parisian chef, I should be sorry to vouch for on such slight acquaintance.—Cornhill Magazine.

PARIS STYLES.

Charming Gauze Costumes Recently Exhibited in the French Capital.

This year young ladies and girls wear gauze dresses worked with gold or silver. The effect by gas-light is very pretty. These gauze dresses are made quite straight, and are worn over a silk skirt of the same color. Gauze, tulle or light crepons are the favorite materials with young ladies. A very pretty costume seen at a fashionable dressmaker's was of pine-apple-colored satin. On the left side was a straight band of tulle covered with flocks of silk velvet. A gauze skirt worked with silver threads was thrown over the dress, but in such a way as not to hide this band. The corsage was of pink satin, trimmed with the same flocks of silk velvet. A bow of pink tulle and flowers should adorn the hair when this costume is put on. Rose-colored dresses are also worn a great deal by young ladies. White and cream tints are quite out of fashion. Blue is seen very little, whether dark or light. Pink is the rage. A very pretty costume would be a pink tulle skirt and an emerald-green velvet corsage; but it must be very simple. The overskirt should be very full and jauntily looped up here and there, showing a pink satin underskirt. The corsage should fasten in the back, be very tight fitting, and without trimming of any kind.

For ladies, satin is a great favorite, and velvet is literally laid on the shelf. The truth is that a velvet dress is very uncomfortable. It is very heavy, and sticks to every thing it touches. Satin, on the contrary, is lighter, slips about like a cat, hangs in graceful folds and changes color like a smooth summer lake.

For evening or afternoon receptions plushes of soft tints—pale rose, very light blue and lavender—are much used, and make charming dresses. The corsage and train are of plush, while the skirt is of heavy silk or satin trimmed with rich embroideries of silver or gold silk. One side of the train is artistically caught up by a cord made of gold thread and beads. Afternoon costumes are also made of plushes, but of dark tints and of French silks. The plush skirt is trimmed with a narrow flounce of silk. The corsage is in plush, with a small silk vest of the same color, and under the corsage on the skirt are two paniers lined with silk and caught up in the style of Louis XIV. This costume is very simple, and yet very stylish. The richest fashions of the past are in vogue to-day. Louis XIV. dresses are now all the rage.—Paris Cor. Chicago Inter Ocean.

STORY OF TWO HATS.

An Exchange of Head-Gear Which Caused Considerable Merriment.

A few years ago an amusing incident occurred in the House of Commons between two well-known members. One, who for many years represented North Warwickshire, was a true specimen of an old English Tory gentlemen, somewhat solemn of visage and dress, while the other, who is still a member of the House, is a prominent Irish Nationalist.

They happened on this occasion to be seated on the same bench, with their hats placed beside them on the seat. The two hats were, though both tall, dissimilar in nearly every other respect; the Tory member's being high and straight, with a flat, narrow brim—just such a hat as an old fogy who looks with contempt upon the fashionable hats of the present day would wear; but the other gentleman's copper, if not in the correct Bond street style, was rather fetching in appearance, with its slightly-curved crown and neatly-curved brim.

An attendant passing a card into the House, with an intimation that a constituent was waiting in the hall to see the Irish member, he, apparently having his attention fixed upon the name on the card, rose, took a hat from the seat, and walked out of the House, placing the hat upon his head. A general titter of amusement took place among the members and others assembled in the lobby and hall to see the familiar figure of the Irish member with a hat on that might have belonged to his grandfather, and his general appearance reminded most people that saw him of a celebrated character of Dickens' in the "Old Curiosity Shop."

It happened at that moment a division was called, and the members summoned into the chamber in the usual way, when, just as the question was about to be put, the loud voice of the member for North Warwickshire was heard calling the attention of Mr. Speaker to a point of order, for the worthy member, being a rare old stickler for a question being put in its proper order, thought he could improve upon the form in which the present one should be put.

Cries of "Order! Order!" rose from all parts of the House, as it is customary for a member addressing the House when the doors are closed for a division to remain "seated and covered." The member receiving a reminder from another sitting near, at once seized the hat beside him and placed it upon his head. A loud roar of laughter was heard from the whole House, the Speaker being hardly able to resist joining in, to see the worthy old gentleman in his somber dress with such a hat on as he had never before been seen to wear during the forty years of his parliamentary life. When the merriment had subsided and the point of order was settled, the Irish member, who had discovered his mistake of taking the wrong hat, resumed his seat, and, with that keen sense of humor he is known to possess, delighted the House by putting on the hat he had taken and assuming a broad grin. The two members sat side by side for a few seconds, one enjoying the amusement the spectacle caused and the other frowning his displeasure at the very unparliamentary proceeding. The hats were then exchanged amid approving cheers of the members.—London Times.

THE BLANKET FISH.

A Pearl-Diver Tells the Story of His Narrow Escape from Suffocation.

The first time I struck the bottom I couldn't believe I was there. It was as clear as air, and the fishes swimming around might have been taken for birds. I landed on a kind of sand hill when they lowered me, and had to walk about fifty feet down into a valley like before I struck the shells. They were all in a bunch, stretched along in a ridge, looking like a black mark against the white bottom. I was dragging the hamper and when I got alongside I began to toss them in. I reckon I had filled half a dozen or so, when all at once I saw a kind of shadow moving over all. At first I thought it was the schooner and then, perhaps, some of the other divers coming down, and then it left; but all at once it came again and grew so dark in a second that I turned quick and looked up, and I'm telling you the truth, master, if my hair hadn't been held down by a copper cap it would have riz right on end. There, a-movin' over me, was what I took to be a bird about thirty feet across. It was wheeling round and round, flapping its big wings, just as you've seen buzzards or eagles do, overhead. Down it came, lower and lower, and I a-crouching as flat as I could get. The nearer it got the bigger it looked, and as I see it was a-settling on me I took the pike I always carried and as it wheeled around over me I let drive. Hit it? Well, I reckon I did. The next thing I knew I was standing on my head, rolling over and over, then yanked sideways, half drowned, and then I reckon I lost my senses, and when I came to I was lyin' on deck and all hands looking at me.

You see, the critter had given the water such a swirl that I was knocked end for end, and my pipe and line twisted around and around, so that I couldn't breathe, and of course that pulled the line, and the men thought I had jerked it to come up, so they hauled away for all they were worth, and that's what saved my life. What was it? Why, nothin' but one of those sea bats—blanket fish the other men called it—and they all said I had a narrow run for it. That was the way, accordin' to their say, that the fish goes to work to get away with a man. They first settle down on you like a blanket, and there you are. There wasn't a man that would go down after that for several days.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

SATURDAY, APRIL 16.....1887

There are men so stupid they cannot see the benefit of proposed improvements that will enrich them and their neighbors. There are others who add perversity to stupidity, and oppose measures of great public benefit because the idea originated with some other person. Those who have the intelligence to see what will bring prosperity, and the will to promote it, must ignore these obstructives and push on the work of improvement. In the march of progress the incapable, the perverse, those who would block the way, will be run over and trampled out of sight.

The President has given Senator Hearst a terrible snub in the appointment of John P. Irish as one of the Commissioners to select a site for a postoffice in San Francisco. Mr. Irish, through the Alta, of which he is editor, and also by personal effort, did all in his power to save his party from the scandal of making George Hearst a Senator. He was unsuccessful and Mr. Hearst got the Senatorship. Mr. Irish did not seek his present appointment, Senator Hearst recommended others; but the President evidently thinks that no attention should be given to the recommendations of such a man. It is wretched policy for a State to give the highest positions in public life to men who have nothing to recommend them but riches. Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania, a poor man, is worth more to his State and the nation than would be a million ignorant millionaires of the stripe of our California Senator.

The Salt Lake Tribune urges the moneyed men of Salt Lake City to set about building a railroad from that city to run through Southern Nevada and into Southern California. The Tribune says: The result would be the subscribers would in a few years own 200 miles of valuable road, and the trade of this city would be doubled within a month after the completion of the road. By just such means Chicago was raised from a village to a great city in fifteen years. Speaking of booms, this would be a starter in earnest. A little branch from the same line would connect with the Carson and Colorado road and open all the southern half of Nevada up to trade with this city. The Carson and Colorado people might make that connection themselves in order to secure cheap coal and their share of the passenger travel. Some fifty mining districts would be tributary to this line, and we suspect all the larger towns of Southern California, and certainly both the railroads there, the Southern Pacific and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, would receive their fuel over this line, a very great traffic of itself. It is a matter quite worth the consideration of gentlemen who really want a boom for Salt Lake City.

SATURDAY, APRIL 16.....1887.

MARRIED.

NELLIGAN—MALONE—At Independence, April 13th, 1887, by Judge Hannah, Henry P. Nelligan to Miss Annie S. Malone.

Mr. C. Anthony, of Darwin, was at Independence some days this week.

Mr. W. Phillippay, of Bishop Creek, was at Independence during the week.

Mrs. Lilly Cook, of Bishop Creek, has been at Independence most of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelligan, married last Wednesday, left Independence next morning on a trip to San Francisco.

Mr. John Lank has gone to San Francisco. It is a long time since Uncle John has taken a holiday and he'll have a good time now.

Mrs. J. J. Gunn, of Prescott, Arizona, arrived last Tuesday on a visit at the home of her father, Mr. John Shepherd, at George's Creek.

Mrs. Helen Horner, of Los Angeles, niece of Mr. John Shepherd, came with her cousin, Mrs. Gunn, and is now on a visit to her relatives at George's Creek.

Aaron Hood, better known as "Hickey," was examined at Independence last Wednesday and was held for trial for shooting at David Stubblefield. Two shots were fired, but neither took effect.

It is no evidence of thrift to see a farmer at work on Sunday. In fact it is strong evidence of stupid incapacity. No man who is fairly industrious six days of the week need work on Sunday. The Sunday working farmer may reasonably be taken for a lazy man.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr has moved into the parsonage of the M. E. Church at Independence. Services will be held at the Church every Sunday, and at the schoolhouse at Camp Independence. To-morrow service will be held at Camp Independence at 1 o'clock afternoon; and at Independence at 7:30 evening. All are invited to attend.

No one can read the letter of Mr. Marsh, printed in this issue, without being forcibly impressed with the growing need for direct rail communication with Los Angeles. A good deal of talk has recently been had on the good that might be accomplished by sending some capable representative of Owens valley to Los Angeles, to make known the resources of the country to the Board of Trade and business men and capitalists of that city.

LADIES will find relief from their Costiveness, Swimming in the Head, Colic, Sour Stomach, Headache, Kidney troubles, etc., by taking a dose of Simmons Liver Regulator after dinner or supper, so as to move the bowels once a day. Mothers will have better health and the babies will grow more robust by using the Regulator. If an infant shows signs of Colic, nothing like a few drops in water for relief. The Genuine has the red Z on front of Wrapper.

Very little interest was taken in Inyo county in the vote on the Constitutional Amendments. At Independence only about one-third of the full vote was cast, and of this third four-fifths were against amendments Nos. one and two. A little over one-third of the votes cast were in favor of amendment No. 3. Sufficient time had not been given for a full discussion of the amendments in the Press. The voters generally did not understand them, and thought it safer to vote against than for them. Had amendment No. 3 been fully and clearly understood by all the voters, the vote in favor of adopting it would have been unanimous, or nearly so.

[Communicated.]

Last Wednesday evening, April 13th, Miss Annie S. Malone, of Camp Independence, and Mr. Henry Nelligan, of Reno, Nevada, were married at the residence of the bride's parents. At nine o'clock the wedding party entered the parlor. The charming bride, leaning on the arm of her father, was arrayed in a very rich and hansome, dark slate colored silk, elaborately trimmed with passamenterie and valenciennes lace. The ceremony was performed by the Hon. John A. Hannah, in his usual impressive manner. Miss Mary Malone, sister of Miss Annie, acted as bridesmaid and N. E. Conklin best man. After the ceremony was over and the first flood of congratulations had subsided, the party repaired to the dining room where supper was prepared, consisting of everything good and spread with the characteristic generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Malone. Congratulatory toasts were given amidst the clinking of glasses and the brilliant repartee of many an applicable joke. The time was enlivened by recitations and songs until three o'clock, when the guests took their leave, pronouncing it one of the most enjoyable evenings they had ever spent. The bride was the recipient of many handsome presents, among which were: Silver butter knife and spoon from Miss Jessie Parsons; Messrs. Bertrand and Henry Rhine, set of beautiful glassware; A. W. Eibeshutz, pair of painted vases, and something very substantial from the bride's parents. The next morning Mr. and Mrs. Nelligan left for San Francisco where they will spend a few weeks, after which they return to Independence, which place will be their future home.

Mill Will Close.

A RAILROAD WANTED.

What an Observant Man Saw in Los Angeles.

The following letter from Mr. J. W. Marsh, of Fort Churchill, Nevada, is well worth attention:

LOS ANGELES,

INYO INDEPENDENT:—I am here in the midst of great real estate speculations, where large fortunes have been made in a day, and find it hard to keep cool and not take a hand. But to enter the ring plenty of ready cash is required, more, indeed, than I have available, so I have to be content with trying to get the eyes of the fortunate ones on to the fine horses I brought here for sale. In one of the papers here I noticed an article from the INYO INDEPENDENT, on the Inyo marble, and feeling an interest in the prosperity of your county, and having seen some of your fine marble; I have given a little attention since coming here to marble—or stone—on exhibition in the city from various quarries; among the rest, the Colton and Victor quarries, in the San Bernardino mountains; also the Tehachipi quarry, situated near the Tehachipi Pass. I am not a marble expert, therefore do not claim to speak authoritatively on the character of these stones. But it seems to be held here that the quarries named do not yield what may strictly be called marble, but rather a kind of lime spar, and while some of it is quite attractive, none of it, as I think, has the true marble crystalization. At any rate it is very coarse, and when polished shows the coarse crystals very decidedly. I do not think it will ever be used extensively for the purposes for which the true marble alone seems suited. It is quite possible that for ordinary building purposes a good deal of this stone may be used; but no one can yet tell how solid it may be, nor how it may resist destruction by the atmospheric influences here. One thing is certain, it has none of the fine characteristics of the Inyo marble I have seen; that appeared to me to have about the same crystalization as the finest Italian marble, and to be capable of receiving a polish I have never seen equaled in any marble. I have heard marble experts say the white Inyo marble fully equals the finest statuary marble of Italy and much surpasses the Vermont.

I congratulate Inyo county, and all concerned in the development of the Inyo quarry, on having something superior to anything yet developed elsewhere in the State. The remarkably beautiful variety of your colored marbles, their exceedingly fine texture and solidity, must, it seems to me, make a large demand for them, not only in California and the other Pacific States, but also in the Atlantic and middle Western States. Certainly the people of the whole coast should feel a deep interest in this enterprise in your county; it will in time keep millions of dollars at home that would but for this discovery have been sent to a foreign land. It will enlarge the field of home industry and make new employment for labor and new market for the products of the soil. As a citizen of Nevada I rejoice in the assured prosperity of Inyo county.

Yours sincerely,
W. J. MARSH.

New Normal School.

The new Normal School for Northern California is to be located at Chico. A more beautiful or more suitable place for the school could not be found in the State. There are now two Normal Schools, one at San Jose and another at Los Angeles. When the new school shall be completed the southern, middle and northern parts of the State will be provided for. Not one of these schools is within easy reach from that vast portion of the State east of the Sierra mountains. If the need for a Normal school east of the Sierras were fairly presented to the Legislature, there need be little doubt that such an institution would be provided for. The creation of the new Agricultural District, No. 18, is proof that the importance of this region will be recognized by the Legislature when fully made known.

Farewell Reception.

Miss Minnie Harris and Miss Sarah Josephs were given a farewell reception last Wednesday evening at Mair's Hall. The young ladies being about to start for San Francisco, their many friends took this way of showing their esteem, and the high appreciation in which the ladies are held at Independence. A large company met at the hall early in the evening and engaged in dancing, which was kept up till a little after midnihgt; when farewells were spoken, kind wishes for mutual happiness expressed; the company reluctantly parted from their guests and from each other and

"Each took off his separate way,
Resolved to meet some other day."

Change.

It is very gratifying to the people of Independence to hear the comments of strangers upon the improvements made in the town since the fire. Neat buildings; clean, tidy streets; an air of thrift pervades the town. The old sleepy, seedy, out-at-elbows, down-at-heel, half-dazed, wholly shiftless appearance was swept away on wings of flame. Independence is no longer a Sleepy Hollow, but a live, wide-awake, progressive American town. Strangers are quick to note and remark upon the change.

Conquered at Last.

When Lieutenant Wortherspoon was at Camp Independence, some years ago, he was thought to be proof against the keenest dart in cupid's quiver. But the tough warrior has been conquered at last; he has surrendered unconditionally to Miss Mary Adams, of Utica, New York. The wedding cards are out, and it was from one of these, sent to Mr. Eibeshutz, at Independence, that the fact was learned here.

Woolly Aphis.

A fruit grower of Visalia gives the following receipt for woolly aphis:

Take one-half pound Barbadoes or crude aloes and dissolve in one gallon alcohol. Water should not be included. Apply with sponge. In October and November this preparation should be applied to body of tree close to ground. April and May are, however, the best months to do the work, and then the whole tree should be sponged.

Will Bore.

Mr. John D. Shaw has recenily brought well boring machinery to Big Pine, and will proceed at once to bore an experimental well. The machine will bore a seven inch hole. This is the first machinery of the kind yet brought to Owens valley, and the experiments of Mr. Shaw will be watched with much interest.

New Postoffice.

The establishment of a new postoffice at Bishop Station will be a great convenience to that section. The new office is to be called Laws.

Mining Notes.

Mr. Hunt, a representative of San Francisco parties, recently bought a mining claim at New Coso, a few miles from Darwin. A large shipment of goods and supplies for the mine is now at Keeler. As soon as this lot of goods can be hauled to the mine work will be pushed with vigor.

J. C. Eddy is running his mill at Old Coso. The run will cover a period of some weeks.

J. A. McKenzie is getting out ore right along from the Lucky Jim mine.

There is still so much snow in the mountains around Lookout that teams cannot get to the charcoal; this delays starting up the furnace. In the meantime more ore is accumulating at the furnace, and teams are hauling steadily from the mines to Keeler for shipment to San Francisco.

A Cruel Hardship.

In the case of Cook versus Cook, being being a suit for alimony and divorce, called before Judge Hannah this week, on application of counsel for defendant, Court granted a change of venue to San Francisco. This is considered adverse to the interests of plaintiff. It is believed that the defendant will never call for the record in the case, and further proceedings could only be had by the plaintiff meeting the expense of the defendant as well as her own. It is a cruel hardship that this plaintiff should not be able to force a worthless scoundrel to give some of the wealth he has inherited for the support of his deserted wife and children. In granting the change of venue the Court only gave to the defendant what he had a right to demand under the law.

PETITION FOR AN IRRIGATION DISTRICT

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent, that they and each of them are freeholders owning lands within the boundaries hereinafter fully described and set forth.

That the lands within the said boundaries are susceptible of one mode of irrigation from a common source, to-wit, the Owens River and its tributaries; and by the same system of works.

That your petitioners are desirous of organizing an Irrigation District under the provisions of an act of the General Assembly of the State of California, entitled, "An Act to provide for the organization and government of irrigation districts, and to provide for the acquisition of water and other property, and for the distribution of water thereby for irrigation purposes," approved March 7, 1887, for the purposes hereinbefore stated, and in said Act provided for.

That the lands proposed to be included in said Irrigation District are situated in the County of Inyo, State of California, and the said boundaries within which said proposed district is situate, are fully described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at the quarter section corner on the line between sections two and eleven in township No. eleven, south, of range No. thirty-four, east, M. D. M; thence south following the line in the centre of sections Nos. eleven, fourteen, twenty-three and twenty-six, four miles; thence west twenty chains; thence south forty chains; thence west twenty chains; thence south forty chains to township line between townships eleven and twelve, south; thence south following the section line between sections two and three and ten and eleven, one hundred and twenty and ten hundredths chains to quarter corner between sections Nos. ten and eleven, in township No. twelve, south, of range No. thirty four, east; thence west twenty chains; thence south one hundred and forty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south sixty chains to corner common to sections twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-six and twenty-seven; thence east twenty chains; thence south forty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south one mile to the centre of section No. thirty-five; thence east twenty chains; thence south twenty chains; thence east forty chains; thence south twenty chains to township line between townships Nos. twelve and thirteen, south, of range No. thirty four and thirty-five, east; thence south twenty chains; thence east ten hundredths chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south twenty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south sixty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south forty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south eighty chains; thence east forty chains; thence south sixty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south twenty chains; thence east forty chains; thence south twenty chains to section line between sections Nos. sixteen and twenty-one; thence east twenty chains to corner common to sections Nos. fifteen, sixteen, twenty-one and twenty-two, in township No. thirteen, south, of range No. thirty-five, east; thence south forty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south two hundred and twenty and forty hundredths chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south twenty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south twenty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south sixty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south eighty chains; thence east twenty chains to centre of section No. fourteen, in township No. fourteen, south, of range No. thirty-five, east, M. D. M; thence east ninety-two and eighty-five one hundredths chains to the west shore of Owens Lake; thence following the shore line of Owens Lake north-easterly to the mouth of Owens River; thence following the west bank of Owens River north-westerly to the point of intersection of the section line between sections Nos. two and eleven, in township No. eleven, south, of range No. thirty-four, east, M. D. M; thence west twelve chains to the place of beginning.

We therefore pray that your Honorable Board make an order giving notice of an election to be held in said proposed District, by the qualified electors therein, for the purpose of determining whether or not said Irrigation District shall be organized under the provisions of said Act.

And we will ever pray, etc.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.

JOHN C. EVANS, Stoutland, Mo., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on my farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take so much labor off of men as the Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house, if they had to take the feathers from under their pigs and babies to pay for it."

JOHN E. DODGE, Jr., jeweler, Normal, Ill., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. Jet. It is the best machine ever invented by man. Jet. We have just ate good dinners on Monday, as on any other day. Jet. If you run short, you can not buy more for girls."

I will ship a complete set to them desiring an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best washer in the world for saving labor, clothes and soap. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.

A LESSON WITH A MORAL.

When Will Our Eyes be Opened to this Great National Calamity?

The year 1886 played sad havoc with many prominent men of our country.

Many of them died without warning, passing away apparently in the full flush of life.

Others were sick but a comparatively short time. We turn to our files and are astonished to find that most of them died of apoplexy, of paralysis, of nervous prostration, of malignant blood humor, of Bright's disease, of heart disease, of kidney disease, of rheumatism, or of pneumonia.

It is singular that most of our prominent men die of these disorders. Any journalist who watches the telegraph reports, will be astonished at the number of prominent victims of these disorders.

Many statements have appeared in our paper with others to the effect that the diseases that carried off so many prominent men in 1886, are really one disease taking different names according to the location of the fatal effects.

When a valuable horse perishes, it becomes the nine days' talk of the sporting world, and yet thousands of ordinary horses are dying every day, their aggregate loss is enormous, and yet their death creates no comment.

So it is with individuals. The cause of death of prominent men creates comment, especially when it can be shown that one unsuspected disease carries off most of them, and yet "vast numbers of ordinary men and women die before their time every year from the same cause."

It is said if the blood is kept free from uric acid, that heart disease, paralysis, nervous prostration, pneumonia, rheumatism, and many cases of consumption, would never be known. This uric acid, we are told, is the waste of the system, and it is the duty of the kidneys to remove this waste.

We are told that if the kidneys are maintained in perfect health, the uric, kidney, acid is kept out of the blood, and these sudden and universal diseases caused by uric acid will, in a large measure disappear.

But how shall this be done? It is folly to treat effects. If there is any known way of getting at the cause, that way should be known to the public. We believe that Warner's safe cure, of which so much has been written, and so much talked of by the public generally, is now recognized by impartial physicians and the public as the one specific for such diseases.

Because public attention has been directed to this great remedy by means of adveatising, some persons have not believed in the remedy. We cannot see how Mr. Warner could immediately benefit the public in any other way, and his valuable specific should not be condemned because some nostrums have come before the public in the same way, any more than that all doctors should be condemned because so many of them are incompetent.

It is astonishing what good opinions you hear on every side of that great remedy, and public opinion thus based upon an actual experience, has all the weight and importance of absolute truth.

At this time of the year, the uric acid in the blood invites pneumonia and rheumatism, and there is not a man who does not dread these monsters of disease; but he need have no fear of them we are told, if we rid the blood of the uric acid cause.

These words are strong, and may sound like an advertisement, and be rejected as such by unthinking people, but we believe they are the truth, and as such should be spoken by every truth-loving newspaper.

FORTUNATE CHILDREN.

A Seemingly Trifling Gift Proves a Source of Wealth.

The singular manner in which wealth comes suddenly and unexpectedly to some people, and the equally singular circumstances by which others have the much sought for key in their hands, and unknowingly pass it to some one else, are events of every-day life, and yet in some cases the facts form an interesting chapter of incidents well worth narrating. A case in point occurred in Oakland during the present month, in which a widow named Morris and her two little children were the parties interested. On the afternoon of last New Year's Day, Angus M. Robinson of St. Louis, Mo., and a brother of Mrs. Morris, while on a visit to San Francisco on business, availed himself of the opportunity to make a New Years's call on his sister across the bay. While there a neighbor came in for a few minutes, and in the course of conversation remarked that he had been quite lucky during the last month of the old year in drawing $100 in The Louisiana Lottery. Shortly after the neighbor's departure the subject of the Lottery was again referred to in the conversation between Mrs. Morris and her brother. The latter remarked that he bought tickets regularly every month, but had drawn but two small prizes, one of $50 and one of $20. At this moment Mrs. Morris's two little children came running into the room, and Mr. Robinson suggested to his sister that he had a number of coupons in his pocket, and that he would give her one apiece for the children. The tickets were received, and but little thought of them for some time. About the date of the drawing on the 11th inst., Mrs. Morris made a note of the two numbers 91,960 and 39,644, and watched for the first published intelligence. On the next day after the drawing a few of the numbers winning large prizes were published, and in an interview with a reporter a few days ago the lady said: "Why, you cannot imagine my surprise when I read one of those two numbers at the head of the list. I had to read it over and over again before I could believe my own eyes. But it turned out to be the truth, and I forwarded the ticket to New Orleans for collection. It was 91,960, and it drew $15,000. The money was promptly paid, and I received it a few days ago. It is to be invested for the benefit of my two little ones, and by the time they reach maturity it will amount to a handsome sum, to start them on life's voyage."—San Francisco (Cal.) Call, Jan. 30.

Aaron Smith of Los Angeles, for several years in the Clerk's office in the Assembly, says if he is summoned before the Investigating Committee he can make some startling revelations.

WHAT OF THAT?

Tired! well, and what of that?
Didst fancy life was spent on beds of ease,
Fluttering the rose leaves scattered by the breeze?
Come, rouse thee! work while it is called to-day.
Coward, arise, go forth thy way!

Lonely! and what of that?
Some must be lonely; 'tis not given to all
To feel a heart responsive rise and fall—
To blend another life into its own.
Work may be done in loneliness; work on!

Dark! well, and what of that?
Didst fondly dream the sun would never set?
Dost fear to lose thy way? Take courage yet.
Learn thou to walk by faith and not by sight,
Thy steps will guided be, and guided right.

Hard! well, and what of that?
Didst fancy life one summer holiday,
With lessons, none to learn, and naught but play?
Go, get thee to thy task. Conquer or die!
It must be learned. Learn it, then, patiently.

No help! nay, 'tis not so;
Though human help be far, thy God is nigh,
Who feeds the ravens, hears his children cry.
He's near thee wheresoe'er thy footsteps roam,
And he will guide thee, light thee, help thee home.

Phrases from Shakespeare.

Shakespeare's influence over the public is shown by the extent to which his phrases have become incorporated into our language. Among these are "bag and baggage," "dead as a doornail," "hit or miss," "love is blind," "selling for a song," "wide world," "fast and loose," "unconsidered trifles," "westward ho," "familiarity breeds contempt," "patching up excuses," "misery makes strange bed fellows," "to boot" (in trade), "short and long of it," "comb your head with a three legged stool," "dancing attendance," "getting even" (revenge), "birds of a feather," "that's flat," "Greek to me" (unintelligible), "packing a jury," "mother wit," "killed with kindness," "mum" (for silence), "ill wind that blows no good," "wild goose chase," "scarecrow," "luggage," "row of pins" (as a mark of value), "viva voce," "give and take," "sold" (in the way of a joke), "your cake is dough." The girl who playfully calls some youth a "milksop" is also unconsciously quoting Shakespeare, and even "loggerhead" is of the same origin. "Extempore" is first found in Shakespeare, and so are "almanacs!" Shakespeare is the first author that speaks of "the man in the moon," or mentions the potato or uses the term "eyesore" for annoyance."—Chicago Times.

What Four Sparrows Can Do.

Two pairs of sparrows were watched by an observant naturalist feeding their young in their nests in only one half hour with the larvæ of the bluebottle fly from a dead cat. They fetched these in all 104 times, and one of the birds also caught 14 flies on the wing. Now, the common house fly is computed to produce in one season, so prolific is the progeny after progeny, no less than 20,900,000, say, in round numbers, 21,000,000, and thus were prevented by these two pairs of birds no fewer than 280,000,000 by the capture of 14 flies and 2,800,000,000 by the destruction of the 104 larvæ. Again, there figured in the parish accounts of one parish in Gloucestershire a charge for 17 dozen of (so called) tomtits' heads; in another parish, Melbourne, in Derbyshire, a sparrow club destroyed in one year 4,577 small birds, and in yet another 3,500. Take the smaller of these two last numbers, and multiply it by the number of flies just calculated as prevented by the two pairs of sparrows, and it gives what we may very well call a grand total of 7,280,000,000,000.—London Times.

The Grinding of the Ice.

"The submarine forest off our port," said a man from Kenosha, Wis., "is being broken up by the grinding of the ice. This forest extends about a mile and a half into the lake. The grain and bark of the trees are entirely dissimilar from anything found in the forests of the present day, thus showing almost conclusively that the buried forest was swallowed up by the sea ages and ages ago. Fishermen who cast their nets near these leafless and petrified trees often bring up whole branches and twigs, and once in a great while a heavy sea washes a gnarled trunk ashore. There are scientific men who hold that the sunken forest proves that the earth has been paying tribute to the lake ever since the birth of time. The vast amount of ice in the lake this winter has had the effect of demolishing many of the trees, portions of which have been cast upon the anchor ice during the severe easterly gales."—Chicago Herald.

Gen. Sheridan's Plan.

Gen. Sheridan has proposed a striking and ingenious plan of harbor defense, based upon his experience in fighting Indians years ago. He found sunken pits held by riflemen better than forts, which formed a clearly visible mark for the enemy. He therefore proposes a series of submerged pits in the sea, with guns that can be raised or lowered at pleasure, never rising above the surface of the water so far as to afford a good mark for an advancing fleet. Such works would be better defended against hostile fire by the surrounding water itself than any visible fort can be by steel or other casing. The idea is worth consideration, as it appears to offer a maximum of defensive force with a minimum of cost.—New York Tribune.

Are the Times Degenerate?

When one reads of defaulting treasurers and cashiers, he is likely to refer to the degeneracy of the times in morals, in honesty and trustworthiness. But are they degenerate? Are the moral instincts less keen than they were of old? It will be safe to deny it. You cannot tell what the morals of a man are until he is tempted. In the olden time industries were so poorly developed that it was necessary to repose trusts in others only in a very limited degree, and hence the defaulters were few. The people of the present day endure the test of temptation, no doubt, more creditably than the ancestors of past centuries would have done.—Good Housekeeping.

Green Chalk for Cues.

They are trying to introduce green chalk in some of the billiard rooms of Chicago. It is claimed that the chalk loses none of its adhesiveness by reason of its artificial color, and that it possesses the merit of preserving the color of cloth. Chalk, as it is used at present, soon fades the heaviest emerald cloth, and makes the tables appear unsightly and worn.—New York Sun.

The Plants of Japan.

At a late meeting of the London Linnean society was exhibited a volume of "Honzo Zufu" ("Illustrations and Brief Descriptions of the Plantst of Japan"), by Iwasaki Tsanemasa, which consists of ninety-six volumes containing 2,000 colored figures. The task of reproduction by native hand labor is so great that only two or three copies are known to have been completed.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Statistics show that in a given 100 cases of rheumatism only three deaths occur as the direct effect of the disease.

IN JOAQUIN MILLER'S CABIN.

One day I walked out to Joaquin Miller's cabin on the hills just outside the city. Everything about the place looked deserted and desolate, very different from what it looked a year ago when I first visited it. Then everything, both inside and out, was neat and clean, a horse was tethered just outside the door and the owner was inside hard at work, turning out almost unreadable manuscript. Looking in at the door, before knocking, I saw a strange sight for fashionable Washington. Seated on a plain, unvarnished chair, drawn up to a rough pine table that cost probably $1, sat a man in the picturesque garb of the gold miners of California. He was writing rapidly with a steel pen, and the floor around him was scattered with finished pages. On the plank wall above the papers was a single picture and around it, tacked to the wall with pins, were scraps of paper covered with hyeroglyphics that I afterwards found were notes.

Over in the corner of the room was a bunk such as may be seen in the steerage of ocean steamships. It was covered with a profusion of the richest skins and furs, some of which were also hung about the walls. The wild haired poet of the Sierras received me pleasantly, and in answer to a question about his method of composition he said: "I have no method; I write when I feel inclined, and do not give any thought to the subject before commencing. But I must be alone, not even an animal must be in the room with me, and I even turn my cat out of doors."

After a pleasant ordinary chat I left the picturesque little cottage an the hill and its queer occupant. I must confess I felt a little disappointed with my visit, for in everything but dress I had found my host an average man. The next day, however, I saw another phase of his curious character. Walking in the Smithsonian grounds I heard behind me the clatter of galloping hoofs, and turning I saw approaching, riding wildly, the poet. He had his sombrero in his hand, and his long hair was floating in the breeze. He seemed to be unconscious of everything around him, completely lost in the pleasure of his gallop. This is the last time I ever saw him in Washington. He left soon after and for a year has been traveling in Mexico and the southern states. He is now in San Francisco where he edits a magazine, but he is a creature of moods, and may bob up in Washington any day. He has lived longer here than anywhere else.—Washington Cor. Detroit Free Press.

The Alaskan's Intoxicant.

During a course of years, commencing with the Russian occupation of the country, before the cession of the province to the United States, and subsequent to that time, men of our country found a lucrative business in the sale of molasses and sugar to the Alaska Indians. From these two substances they make a drink which they call hoochenoo, and it is just a little worse than the lowest grade of Hester street whisky. In fact it is almost pure alcohol, slightly discolored. The Indians manufacture it for their own consumption, and for the use of their friends, but it is rarely sold by them to one another. They make a sort of a mash from molasses and dirty brown sugar. This they put into a large caldron over a slow fire.

Some of them have considerable mechanical ingenuity, and they make a crude sort of a still out of tin. The pieces are cut out for the worm, one Indian holds them in place while another, with a bar of solder and a hot iron fastens them together. They patch on piece after piece, until they have completed a rude sort of a worm, and then their still is ready. They understand the process of condensation of the vapor in the worm and know how to get the distillation out of it. Then they double and triple distill this product, and in the end have a liquor that you or I would not dare to drink, unless we wanted at once to experience all the horrors of delirium tremens. The stuff is simply terrific in its power. When the process of manufacture is completed they store it away in bottles for use. The hoochenoo is distilled only in the most inaccessible parts of Alaska, as the sale of large quantities of sugar or molasses in the more thickly settled portions of the country is prohibited and Indians who are known to possess quantities of either commodity are closely watched.—Lieut. H. T. Monahan in Brooklyn Eagle.

Animal Lore Among Savages.

The natural history of savage races corresponds exactly with this natural history of European folk lore. The Zulu will tell you that the reason the hyrax has no tail wherewith to drive away the flies is, that on the day when tails were distributed the hyrax, fearing it was going to rain, begged the other animals to bring him his tail to save himself the trouble of going. So that the proverb to this day addressed to a Zulu who from laziness asks another to do or fetch something for him is: "The hyrax went without a tail because he sent for it." The Bushman will tell you that the jackal's back is black because he once carried the sun on his back when he found that great luminary, then a mortal on earth, sitting weary by the wayside. And the Aht will tell you, in explanation of the melancholy note of the loon, of a fisherman robbed by a companion of his fish and at the same time of his tongue, unable to respond to questions about his sport, save by a noise like the loon's, whose plaintive cry is still the voice of that hapless fisherman, trying in vain to make himself understood. And just so the Greek would have told you that the nightingale was in reality Philomela, the unhappy sister of Procne, bewailing in the form of a bird the wrong done to her by Tereus, her brother-in-law, who, in order to prevent her from informing her sister, deprived her of her tongue.—Gentleman's Magazine.

The Climate of Alaska.

"The climate of Sitka, Alaska, is milder than that of Brooklyn, the mean temperature for the summer months being about 60 degs., and the average temperature for the winter months about 40 degs. It is a mistake prevalent throughout the United States that Alaska is an Arctic climate. The population of Alaska in 1885 was 8,900 whites and 20,889 natives.—Lieut. H. T. Monahan in Brooklyn Eagle.

The Least Painful Death.

Death by aconite is the least painful of any. The feeling is something like being frozen to death. A kind of numbness begins in the extremities and gradually spreads over the entire system. There is no pain whatever, except, possibly, a slight burning sensation in the breast. The fatal sensation is, in fact, extremely pleasant. Death from freezing is said to be delightful. It is the same with aconite. A pleasant tingling is felt through the limbs, while entrancing dream fancies run through the brain.—Cincinnati Physician.

WHOLESALE BUTCHERY.

ANNIHILATION OF THE LARGE GAME ANIMALS OF THE WEST.

I remember a few years ago (the winter of 1880 and '81, now I recall the exact date) accompanying a military expedition across the northern plains and mountains, in pursuit of that great Indian general, Sitting Bull. Before we were well into the hostile country we passed and I counted no less than twelve separate parties of sportsmen (mostly English) camped on the buffalo range, and all busily engaged in their deadly work of slaughtering bison. Take one party, for example, which will be a fair sample of all the rest. This particular outfit numbered seven Britishers, two Americans, and one half breed guide, and they had been out from Glendive about two weeks. They were well monuted on Cayuse ponies, with Sharp's forty-five caliber rifles, and at that time about thirty miles north of the Yellowtsone river in the very midst of tens of thousands of buffalo. We struck their trail long before we reached their camp, which was very easily followed by the number of buffalo carcasses lining the route. The first day their party had killed twelve, next day nineteen, third day thirty-six, and fourth day 114, and still the fun was going on.

Twenty-four hours later our command encountered another band of sportsmen (majority English gentlemen), who were also doing their level best to exterminate the noble animals, but they were a little nearer the hostile country, and consequently deeper into the buffalo herds, and therefore had more animals to hunt than their neighbors in the rear. The day before we crossed the divide and plunged direct into Sitting Bull's dominions we came upon the last band of hunters, or at least the band which had ventured furthest from civilization, who were surrounded by more buffalo than I ever believed were in existence. I saw one herd alone that must have numbered 15,000 or 20,000, besides hundreds of small herds from 50 to 500, dotting the plains and scattered through the river bottoms. I found them up in the mountains where a pony could hardly climb. Now this last party of hunters were out strictly for business and not pleasure. They were killing bison for the tongues alone, not even taking the skins. They had a small pack train with them of about thirty mules, and were pretty nearly ready to start back to civilization, having secured a full load of tongues, or as many as their animals could carry. Such has been the wanton destruction of our game in the northwest during past years that to-day there is scarcely a single bison left in the vast region that was once the home of millions. With the wonderful bands of elk that used to throng the mountains and valleys of Montana and Idaho it is the same old story. All gone, or nearly so, and not a saving law by national or territorial governments to protect them.

Plenty Coues, a chief of the Crow Indian tribe, camped a few miles from this fort at the present writing, is just about returning from a rather successful hunting trip in the Big Horn mountains, during which time his bucks captured 40 elk, 137 deer, and 11 mountain lions or panthers. I asked old Plenty Coues how the game were getting on, but the old chief only shook his head, and declared all wild animals were getting scarce. His party, however, had had a successful hunt, as the elk meat and deer meat would keep hunger from the doors of his forty-seven lodges during the coming winter, and, besides, the bounty paid on lion skins would bring in considerable cash. As a dollar is as big as a cart wheel to an Indian, the $8 for each panther scalp, which they demanded in silver dollars, was worth more than all their supplies secured on the trip. During the season of 1884, which was the last great slaughter year, there were no less than 1,000 hunters, professional and pleasure seeking, scattered along the line of the Northern Pacific railroad in Montana and Idaho. These insatiable Nimrods succeeded in clearing the country of buffalo, but their efforts were only partially successful regarding elk, deer, and antelope.

Last year three buffalo bulls were gathered in by the cowboys on the Tongue river roundup in Montana, and the boys thought they were in for lots of fun; but the big fellows looked so lonesome and broken spirited and out of place that the good natured cow punchers hadn't the heart to kill them, so the three forlorn animals were turned adrift on the prairie to shift for themselves. As it happened, last winter was a severe one in Montana, a season of blizzards and snow storms and intense cold. While the domestic herds pulled through the cold in good shape and with little damage, could one believe that those poor old buffalo brutes actually froze to death. Some cowboys who were riding the ranges the following spring looking up their cattle, found all three of the bulls doubled up in a ravine on Upper Powder river, frozen stiff. It was a sad and lamentable ending of a great race.

Excepting a few scattered bands of antelope on the plains north of the Missouri river and the small number of black and whitetail deer in the timber along the river bottoms, what little of the large game we have left in the northwest is congregated in the Yellowtsone National park. Of course there are more or less elk, mountain sheep and deer in the mountains (Big Horn and Rocky ranges), but they are a mere handful to what the country could boast of ten years ago. The laws of the National park forbid the hunting of game within its confines, and it does indeed appear as if our big game were cognizant of the fact, for nearly all the remaining species seem to have sought refuge there.—Fort Keogh Cor. Cleveland Leader.

Different Kinds of Light.

One pound of coal, according to recent Franklin institute tests, will yield an amount of light averaging 150 candles with the electric arc light (about sixty per cent. of this if glass shades are used), twenty candles with incandescent lamps and fourteen to seventeen candles with gas. In this estimate it is assumed that steam coal is burned under a good boiler for the electric lights, and that the gas is obtained from a bituminous coal.—Boston Budget.

Bible Publishers' Jubilee.

The great Bible publishing establishment founded at Halle, in Germany, early last century by Baron von Canstein is about to have a jubilee, and to issue the thousandth edition of its octavo Bible, of which 2,112,790 copies have now been published.—New York Sun.

Something to Remember.

A mother had reproved her little girl for being so clumsy as to drop a dish, and the little girl, after a thoughtful silence, said:

"Mamma, can you write with your left hand?"

"I could if I were left handed, but I'm not."

A GENIAL RESTORATIVE.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are emphatically a genial restorative. The changes which this great botanic remedy produces in the disordered organization are always agreeably, though surely progressive, never abrupt, and violent. On this account it is admirably adapted to persons of delicate constitution and weak nerves to whom the powerful mineral drugs are positively injurious. That it initiates those processes which result in the re-establishment of healthful vigor is conspicuously shown in cases where it is taken to overcome that fruitful cause of debility, indigestion, coupled, as it usually is, with biliousness and constipation. Thorough digestion, regular evacuation and abundant secretion, are results which promptly and invariably attend its systematic use. It is, besides, the best protective against malaria, and a first rate diuretic.

Work is a necessity to all; but, upon how many, woman especially, does it fall with the burden of the "last straw," and this, because their peculiarly delicate constitutions are so liable to functional derangement. We cannot lessen your toil, ladies, but we can make it easier for you, by making you stronger and better able to do it. Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" will relieve you of nervous and other weaknesses, and all the many ills peculiar to your sex.

SAFE, SURE, AND SPEEDY.

No external remedy ever yet devised has so fully and unquestionably met these three prime conditions as successfully as ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. They are safe because they contain no deleterious drugs and are manufactured upon scientific principles of medicine. They are sure because nothing goes into them except ingredients which are exactly adapted to the purposes for which a plaster is required. They are speedy in their action because their medicinal qualities go right to their work of relieving pain and restoring the natural and healthy performance of the functions of muscles, nerves, and skin.

of diseases follows an unhealthy condition of the liver, one of the most important organs of the body. Impure blood, bronchitis, asthma, malarial diseases, consumption, sick-headache, diseases of the skin, kidneys and heart—all may be traced to faulty action or torpidity of the liver. No other known preparation so rapidly and thoroughly restores a disordered liver as Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." It is pleasant to the taste, mild but sure in its action, and a gift to suffering humanity from one of the most successful physicians of the age.

Mrs. M. A. Dauphin of Philadelphia, is well known to the ladies of that city from the great good she has done by means of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She writes Mrs. Pinkham of a recent interesting case. "A young married lady came to me suffering with a severe case of Prolapsus and Ulceration. She commenced taking the Compound and in two months was fully restored. In proof of this she soon found herself in an interesting condition. Influenced by foolish friends she attempted to evade the responsibilities of maturity. After ten or twelve days she came to me again and she was indeed in a most alarming state and suffered terribly. I gave her a tablespoonful of the compound every hour for eight hours until she fell asleep, she awoke much relieved and evidently better. She continued taking the Compound, and in due season she became the mother of a fine healthy boy. But for the timely use of the medicine she believes her life would have been lost."

GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY

CURES ALL HUMORS,
from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Rose Rash, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, White Swellings, Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE." Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, and vital strength, will be established.

CONSUMPTION,
which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. PIERCE thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have sallow color of skin, or yellowish-brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills, alternating with hot flushes, low spirits and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and coated tongue, you are suffering from Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and Torpid Liver, or "Biliousness." In many cases only part of these symptoms are experienced. As a remedy for all such cases, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is unsurpassed.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

SCALLOP FISHING.

Though it had long previously been enjoyed by the shore towns in New England, the introduction of the scallop as an edible into the New York markets is as recent as 1858 or '59. Now the annual product of the fishery, which is restricted in area and subject to much variation, amounts to something like 75,000 gallons in all, worth from twenty-five to thirty thousand dollars at first cost; and New York receives and dispenses about three-fourths.

The species of scallop in question is Pecten Irradians, which is common in suitable places all along our coast. Besides this there are half-a-dozen other varieties, living at more or less depths in the Western Atlantic, one of which, the great Pecten tenuicostatus of the coast of Maine and the Bay of Fundy, was formerly highly valued by the people of that region, but now is too scarce to appear on the tables of even "the rich" except at rare intervals.

Scallops are caught by hand-dredging from small sail boats. The dredges are about thirty inches in width, have a scraper blade upon the bottom, and in favorable weather several may be thrown over from each boat. In shoal water an iron-framed dip net is sometimes used on calm days. It is pretty hard work, and entails exposure to very severe weather.

The only edible part of the scallop is the squarish mass of muscle (the adductor) which holds the shells together, and this part is skillfully cut out by "openers," who have their houses at the landing places where the dredgers take their cargoes to be sold. It is the buyer, not the dredger, who "opens" or "cuts out" the meat and prepares it for market. In some places men alone are employed in this work, at others women and girls for the most part, and they will earn from eighty cents to $1.25 a day. The work is performed with great dexterity. The motions of an expert opener are but three after the scallop is in hand. The bivalve is taken in the left hand, palm up, with the hinges of the scallop towards the opener's body. The knife—a simple piece of steel ground sharp, and with one end stuck in a wooden handle—is inserted in the opening of the shell furthest from the breast. The upper "eye" is severed through by this movement. A flirt at the same moment throws off the upper shell. The second motion cuts the lower fastenings of the eye to the upper shell and takes the soft and useless rim off. The last motion pitches the shell into one barrel and the soft and slimy rim into another. while the eye is thrown into a basin of yellow stoneware holding a gallon. They are then poured from the basin into a large colander, thoroughly washed, placed in clean boxes and shipped to New York and Brooklyn. As little fresh water or ice is placed in contact with the "meats" as possible, as it is thought detrimental to their firmness and flavor. As this is altogether a winter operation, the help of ice in transportation is not usually needed.

There is, or ought to be, no waste in the scallop fishery. On Long Island the refuse is taken by the farmers as manure. The sea-faring agriculturists have always been accustomed to replenish their half-exhausted lands with the scrapings of the beach, and with the menhaden and other seine-fish which could be caught plentifully enough for the purpose in the offing—much to the disgust of every stranger who found himself to leeward of their fields. This demand failing, there is always sale for the refuse to the regular fertilizer-factories scattered along the shore.

The shells are preferred above all others by the oyster-planters as "stools" or "cultch" to spread upon their deep-water planting-beds as objects upon which the oyster-spawn may "set" and grow. This wise preference is due to the fragility of the scallop-shell, permitting it to break into pieces under the strain of a growing cluster of oysters, each one of which will be benefited by the separation, which frees it from the crowding of its fellows and gives it room to expand by itself into comely and valuable rotundity, instead of remaining a strap-shaped distorted member of a coalescent group. All their shells, therefore, can easily be sold by the openers to the oystermen at from three to five cents a bushel.—Ernest Ingersoll, in American Naturalist.

Excavations in Rome.

The Roman archæologist, Prof. Rudolfo, has had for the past sixteen years the absolute control of Roman excavations. Speaking of his work in conversation, he said: "The excavations in Rome are now being conducted by the national government, the municipal government and private citizens. Hundreds of statues and busts we have found, some of marble, others of costly bronze, many in perfect preservation. The Government has spent within the last twelve years not far from $1,000,000, but it has been a remarkable business investment, for the value of our finds is placed at $4,000,000. So rapidly is the work going on that we are almost unable to store properly from day to day the results of excavation." N. Y. Post.

—George Pancake, of Anoka, Minn., with his dog and gun, started to walk to a lumber camp. He met two men, and leaned on his gun as he talked to them. His dog jumped upon him, hit the hammer of the gun with his paw, the gun was discharged, and George was shot dead.—N. Y. Sun.

THE SMOKING HABIT.

A Brief But Exhaustive Argument Against the Use of Tobacco.

An English journal recently offered a prize for the best argument against smoking. Following is the article for which the prize was awarded:

It is unphysiological because no animal in a state of nature uses it, and the first time a man smokes he is usually violently upset by it. When a person eats a new kind of fruit for the first time he may not like it, but it does not make him ill, as such fruit is a food. But tobacco, being a poison, nearly always causes an upset to the system. It is only by continued use that man can use it without being made immediately ill; he is made ultimately diseased by its use.

It is expensive because there is no need for it; it is not even a luxury that helps us to spend our superfluous cash harmlessly, because it causes more loss and injury than it does good. In England we spend at least £12,000,000 a year on tobacco alone; what with pipes, matches, cigar-holders, cigaretts-tubes, cigaret-machines, etc., we do not spend short of £20,000,000.

It is a dirty habit. What smells worse than the breath of a smoker, than his tobacco-soaked clothes, and his rank pipe? Then the ashes from pipes, cigars and cigarets fall on clothes, carpets, table-cloths, etc., and dirty or disfigure them. Smoking blackens the teeth, and if a pipe is smoked the teeth that hold it are worn away, and so we spoil a natural adornment—the teeth.

It is selfish, in that the person only who uses it gets pleasure from it, and that often at the expense of others. Smokers poison the air common to all by the fumes they emit. The selfishness of the smoker causes family quarrels and disputes, the man preferring his pipe to his wife or sweetheart. It is disease-producing. It stops growth, and causes ill-developed persons if used before growth has stopped. In adults it first blunts the sense of taste, smell and sight, and, indirectly, the hearing and touch. It always produces more or less sore throat, and often, in consequence, the worst kind of deafness—viz.: throat deafness. When absorbed into the system it causes palpitation and irregular action of the heart, and has a depressing influence on it. It delays digestion, causes nervousness, trembling of hands, indecision, loss of energy and of will-power, with lowness of spirits. It deadens thought, and makes a man dull and listless instead of being intelligent and active. It causes loss of appetite, helps on cancer of the stomach and is the active cause of most cases of cancer seen in the lower lip, which is rarely seen except among smokers. It also lessens the vitality, and wounds heal less rapidly amongst smokers than amongst non-smokers. It wastes time and energy. It wastes energy as it depresses the vital powers and uses up itself life and power that should be used for helping on mankind. It leads to drinking. Smoking always causes a dryness of the throat, and the saliva ejected is fluid lost to the system; to relieve both these conditions fluids are taken. As tobacco is a nervine depressent alcohol is often used to get rid of this depressed feeling. Statistics of temperance friendly societies show that smokers break away from their pledge in greater numbers than non-smokers do.

It leads to loss of property, goods and lives, by the fires which originate by lighted ashes from pipes, by lighted cigar ends, or matches used by smokers. The loss in this country by fire traceable to smoking is very large.—Chicago Tribune.

PERSIAN SHERBET.

The Various Dainty Substances Used in Its Preparation.

The beverage in Persia is sherbet, which is plentifully supplied, and of which there are many varieties—from the bowl of water with a squeeze of lemon to the clear concentrated juice of any sort of fruit to which water is added to dilute it. Preparing sherbet, which is done with the greatest care, is a very important point in so thirsty a country as Persia, and one upon which much time is devoted. It may be either expressed from the juice of fruit freshly gathered or from the preserved extract of pomegranates, cherries or lemons, mixed with sugar, and submitted to a certain degree of heat to preserve it for winter consumption. Another sherbet is much drank, weich I must not omit to mention, called guzangebden, made from the honey of the tamarisk tree. This honey is not the work of the bee, but the produce of a small insect or worm living in vast numbers under the leaves of the shrub. During the months of August and September the insect is collected and the honey preserved. When used for sherbet it is mixed with vinegar, and although not so delicious as that made from fruit, it makes an excellent temperance beverage. Only among the rich and fashionable are glasses used; in all other classes sherbet is served in china bowls, and drank from deep wooden spoons carved in pearwood.—Belgravia.

—Three tramps broke into a residence near Blairtown, O., during the absence of the family, one morning recently, and pillaged it, wrapping a lot of silverware and other valuables in a blanket. As they were leaving the room the house-dog, a large Newfoundland, rushed in, and seizing one of them by the throat, held him to the floor until, a few moments later, the master arrived and secured him by tying his wrists. The other two escaped, leaving their booty on the floor.—Cleveland Leader.

MODERN SYRACUSE.

What Is Left of a Once Famous and Powerful Sicilian City.

It is somewhat of a relief to reach Syracuse after the crowds, and beggars, and smells, and dirt of the other Sicilian towns; moreover, Syracuse is one of the very few places of which the ideal, formed perhaps in years long past, is realized. We look for quiet, and stagnation, and sunshine, and a mellow air of antiquity, and we find them. If we were to find Syracuse a busy, bustling port, or a wretched, hopelessly decayed place, we should be disappointed; we expect to find just enough animation to make it cheerful, and just enough quiet to remind us of its ancient associations, and we are gratified.

One fact, however, does amaze us, and that is to see how little is left of a city which once consisted of five different towns, of which the circumference was twenty-two miles, and which at its zenith could muster half a million of inhabitants. Indeed, all Syracuse, ancient and modern, can be conveniently explored in the interval occupied by the Rubattino steamers in discharging and taking cargo, although the conscientious antiquary could spend a month in the country around, which is the site of the remainder of the ancient city.

Immediately upon landing we are impressed with the character of modern Syracuse. At any other Italian port we should almost be torn to pieces by natives eager to relieve us of our baggage or to drive us anywhere. But at Syracuse we have actually to call for a porter, not from any lack of men—for all along the quay, big enough for a port with five times the commerce of Syracuse, there are sturdy fellows lounging, lying, sleeping, and, of course, spitting—but because it is evident that labor is a very secondary consideration in the lives of the Syracusans, who, like the Seaford boatmen, seem to get on tolerably well without any visible means of subsistence.

Modern Syracuse need not occupy us long. There is a pleasant esplanade along the water-side of the little harbor, whither resort every afternoon the gallantry, the beauty and fashion of Syracuse, to lounge under the trees, to drive up and down in the most primitive of vehicles, and this esplanade terminates at the famous fountain of Arethusa, for many years neglected and employed as a laundry, now a neatly fenced-in pool in which fish glide and ducks nestle under the shade of the genuine papyrus. In the town which clusters on the cliffs overlooking the bay, there is little of note. It is an extraordinary Italian town, inasmuch as it is clean and provided with a smaller modicum than usual of stenches, but otherwise unremarkable. It has a cathedral built on to the remains of a temple of Minerva, which was once famous for its splendid decoration and its beautiful entrace, and more especially for a roof of gold which blazed in the sunshine like a beacon to the mariner many leagues out at sea. The sturdy pillars still remain engrafted with the walls of the modern cathedral, but nothing more. We must take a carriage to see the sights which lie inland, for the dust on the roads is inches deep; there is absolutely no shade, and the Sicilian sun beats down mercilessly from a sky of eternal blue. Happily, the ruins of ancient Syracuse, after long years of neglect and vandalism, are cared for, as are all monuments of the mighty past, under the intelligent and sympathetic regime of King Humbert, and a Government guide, in return for a franc fee, allows us to wander where we will.—London Society.

BORING FOR GAS.

Difficulties Experienced in Managing and Controlling Powerful Wells.

Boring for gas is exactly like boring for oil, in all its workings; but the after-operations of pumping and packing, as in the case of some oil-wells to raise the oil, are not necessary in gas-wells. If the gas is there, it will come up of its own free will and accord, and come with a rush, blowing tools and every thing else out of the well before it. Indeed, gas men would often be as glad to keep their treasure down as oil men are to get theirs up. The great pressure at which it is confined in the earth, and the corresponding force with which it escapes from the well, makes it somewhat hard to manage or control. This pressure is enormous—as high as five hundreds pounds to the square inch in some cases where it has been guaged. In the great McGugin well, which was not guaged, the pressure is estimated to have reached eight hundred pounds to the square inch. Any attempt to confine the gas in this well for the purpose of measuring it would doubtless have resulted in sending the iron casing flying from the well, or in producing other effects more startling and costly than satisfactory or agreeable. Indeed, until recently, no plan had been devised by which the flow of gas from a well could be stopped or reduced. The quantity of gas that escapes from some wells is enormous, but probably no correct estimate of it has yet been made. Where the gas is "piped" away to mills and houses, all that comes from the well may be used; but if it is not all used, the remainder must be allowed to escape into the air. This is done at the regulator, where it is burned. The regulator is an arrangement of pipes and valves, placed between the gas-well and the town supplied with the gas. It allows only just as much gas as is being burned in the town to go on through the pipes, and so reduces to a proper and safe point the dangerously high pressure of the gas as it comes rushing along from the well. The temperature of the gas as it comes from the wells is about forty-five degrees Fahrenheit.—Samuel W. Hall, in St. Nicholas.

Mr. and Mrs. Bowser.

I suppose that Mr. Bowser is like the majority of men in putting his best side before the public. The other morning when he left the house he knew that baby was sick, I had a headache and the cook was disabled by cutting her hand on a piece of glass. I had told him that we were out of butter and coffee and potatoes, and he said he would stop and order them. Once on the car he forgot all about it, and at 11:30, meeting an old schoolmate, he insisted:

"Now, you come right up to dinner with me. I want you to see my house and my family and have a visit."

"But your wife won't be expecting company."

"Oh, you come right along. My wife and my house are always ready for any visitors I may bring home, and your presence won't cause us an iota of embarrassment."

At 11 o'clock I told Jane to pick up any sort of dinner for Mr. Bowser, and at 12 Mr. Bowser and his friend entered the house. Leaving him in the parlor, Mr. Bowser rushed in on me with:

"Get into your Sunday clothes as soon as possible—dress the baby up—tell cook to have three kinds of meat—send for a nigger to wait on the table, and run through the room and pick up things."

"Mr. Bowser, have you been idiot enough to bring some one home to dinner?"

"Of course I have. What is there wrong about that, I'd like to know?"

"Well, where are the groceries you were to order?"

"Groceries? I—I forgot!"

"Jane can't use but one hand, while I should faint away if I tried to dress. You'll have to take him to a hotel."

"Never! When I invite a man to partake of my hospitality I'll never skulk him off to a hotel! It is a pretty state of affairs that my house is all upset in this manner at this time! Mrs. Bowser, you and I must have a reckoning! I'll be hanged if I put up with such conduct as this!"

And then he returned to the parlor and I heard him say:

"Will, old fellow, I find a note from my Birdie (that's me) stating that she has taken the little angel (that's our wall-eyed baby) over to her sister's for the day, and our idiot of a cook didn't expect me home and has no dinner ready. We'll have to go down to the restaurant."

"That's all right. You've got a beautiful home here."

"And the nicest little wife and the prettiest baby in all the world!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser as he slapped his leg.—Detroit Free Press.

What They Call a "Scoop" Out West.

"One of the best 'beats' I ever heard of," said an old newspaper man, "was one which I myself was fortunate enough to secure for a paper I was editing and managing at the time in Gunnison, Colo. The sheriff and his deputy had gone out in pursuit of some cattle thieves and had followed them into the Indian reservation. We were within a comparatively short distance of the boundary line. After a few days the report came back that the two officers had encountered the thieves and had been killed. The community was immediately thrown into a condition of red hot indignation. A party of 150 was organized at once to lynch the cattle thieves and avenge the murder of the sheriff. The details of the organization and the starting out I printed in full in our paper, and arrange for bona fide messages from the party for the first fifteen miles of their progress. There was a rival paper in the town, and up to this point we were running pretty even. For the next few days we printed purely imaginary accounts of the expedition. I knew the route the party was following and was able to throw in a good deal of local coloring. At the end of the fourth day, as I was going to my house, which stood about a quarter of a mile from the town, for my supper, my reflections as to where I was going to get my next day's story from were suddenly interrupted by the appearance of a 'solitary' horseman coming along at a breakneck pace. When he came within a hundred yards of me I recognized the sheriff. He pulled up on seeing me. I told him at once that he must not go home to his wife until I had seen her, as she believed him dead. He saw the force of my remark. He took his supper with me, I went over and broke the joyful news to his wife, and then I induced him to stay at my house all night. I got his whole story, and printed just as much as all my printers could set up. Did you ever hear of such a scoop? When the two papers came out the next morning it was just the luck of the opposition sheet to make a point of the statement that the rescuing party were in great hopes of securing the sheriff's body. At 9 o'clock the sheriff stepped out of my house and walked through Gunnison. It was the making of my paper."—New York Mail and Express.

The Judge Needed the Money.

I have just heard the following good story on Chief Justice Bleckley. All who know Judge Bleckley and recall his long waving hair and beard will appreciate the story: Judge Bleckley was on his way to the supreme court one morning, when he was accosted by a little street gamin, with an exceedingly dirty face, with the customary "Shine, sir?"

He was quite importunate, and the judge, being impressed with the oppressive untidiness of the boy's face, said: "I don't want a shine, but if you will go wash your face I'll give you a dime."

"All right, sir."

"Well, let me see you do it."

The boy went over to an artesian hydrant and made his ablution. Returning, he held out his hand for the dime.

The judge said: "Well, sir, you've earned your money; here it is."

The boy said: "I don't want your money, old fellow; take it and have your hair cut." Saying which he scampered off.—Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.

THE HOHENZOLLERNS.

Prerogatives and Traditional Policy of the Ruling Family of Germany.

The royal house of Hohenzollern are descended from Count Thassilo, of Zollern, one of the Generals of Charlemagne. His successor, Count Friedrich I., built the family castle of Hohenzollern, near the Danube, in the year 980. In 1415, the head of the family obtained possession of the province of Brandenburg, and two years later was recognized as an Elector of the Empire. A century later, the province of Prussia came into the possession of the family, through the election of Albrecht, a younger son, to the post of Grand Master of the province. This, together with the additions to the family possessions made by Friedrich Wilhelm in the seventeenth century, encouraged the son of the "Great Elector" to crown himself King at Konigsberg, January 18, 1701, under the title of Friedrich I. From this time forward the dominions of the King of Prussia steadily increased, until, after the war of 1866, the kingdom covered 137,066 square miles, with a population of nearly 23,000,000. With this growth in power came the natural rivalry with Austria. As far back as 1833 Prussia had formed the Zollvergein, or customs union, of the German powers, excluding Austria. This was small loss financially to the great empire of Austria-Hungary, but it constituted a tie between Prussia and the German States, and threatened Austria's position as head of the German Confederation. This led to numberless jealousies and bickerings, until finally, in 1866, Prussia determined to exclude Austria from the Confederation. The victory at Sadowa, July 3, settled this question, and Prussian influence became supreme in Germany; so that during the Franco-Prussian war of 1870, King Wilhelm became Emperor Wilhelm I. of a newly organized German Empire.

The Hohenzollerns have always been despotic rulers. The kingdom had no definite constitution until 1849. Before that the Kings had "entrusted" to a convocation of the provincial assemblies the right to be called upon to assist in raising money, by borrowing or by new taxes, but this practically amounted to little, as the King controlled the main sources of revenue, the crown lands and the custom duties. A Prussian diet was established in 1847, and the deputies assembled with great hopes of obtaining a share in the Government. Disappointed in this hope, the tone of the liberal members became disloyal to the King's prerogatives. Some of them compared the situation with that of the English after the revolution of 1688. In answer to this, Captain (now Prince) von Bismarck, who sat as alternate for the representative of the Knight's estate of Jerichow, rose and replied that "the English people were then in a different position from that of the Prussian people now. A century of revolution and civil war had invested it with the right to dispose of the crown and bind it up with conditions accepted by William of Orange. The Prussian sovereigns were in possession of a crown, not by grace of the people, but by grace of God; an actually unconditional crown, some of the rights of which they voluntarily conceded to the people—an example rare in history." This was the position taken by the crown and its supporters. Compare it with the pretension of James I. of England, that the rights of Parliament were derived from the tolerance of the throne.

But popular sentiment was strongly in favor of liberal government, and riots occurred in Berlin, which the King tried vainly to subdue by concessions, first of a new ministry, and second of increased powers to the Diet. The final crushing of this insurrection led to a conservative reaction, and the constitution of 1849 confirmed many of the disputed powers of royalty. Bismarck was looked upon as a rising man at this time, and the King soon recognized his merit by employing him as his representative in the German Diet at Frankfurt. King Friedrich Wilhelm IV. died in 1861, and was succeeded by his brother, the present sovereign. This confirmed Bismarck's power, and when in 1862 the Diet refused the appropriations necessary to carry out the Government policy the Ministry resigned, and the King sent for Bismarck, who was in Paris, and made him Chancellor. The policy of Bismarck has always been that of despotic rule, and the Emperor, though in no sense a tyrant, is so completely under the sway of the traditional policy of the Prussian Kings that he can not understand how a government can be stable without a strong element of despotism.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Justice in Ceylon.

To judge by one or two instances cited by a Colombo correspondent, the quality of mercy has been a good deal strained in Ceylon lately. In one case an influential native, "who set upon an unsuspecting Cingalese and trampled him to death," was rewarded—one can hardly say punished—by six months' hard labor. Scarcely less extraordinary is another case in which a murderer, whose death sentence had been commuted to penal servitude, had escaped from jail, and, being caught asleep in a hut, had stabbed and killed the policeman who attempted to arrest him. For the second murder this man was sentenced to two years' imprisonment—whether to be served concurrently with or after his unexpired term is not stated. The judge who perpetrated this singular practical joke is said to have justified himself on the ground that a policeman had no right to arrest a man when he was asleep. So that in Ceylon it is not murder to kill a policeman who exceeds his duty. —London Truth.

ITCH FOR NOTORIETY.

Something About a Disease Which Affects Hundreds of Silly People.

To those who are most frequently brought in contact with persons who yearn for some sort of notoriety the extent of such yearning is astonishing, more or less amusing, and sometimes decidedly disgusting. When the ambition to become famous is born of a worthy object it is commendable, but when it springs from a morbid desire to be noticed, just for the sake of personal gratification, for the airing of a vanity and for a pretense at appearing more important than circumstances should amply warrant, it is simply sickening to those who are solicited to become accessory to the fraud; it makes the public not only unsympathetic but resentful when it succeeds, and doubtless, it frequently palls on the appetite of its possessor when its fullness has been reached. To aim for that sort of fame which almost inevitably follows heroic action; the invention of some desirable thing which is to benefit the world; the production of good work in literature; the evolvement of a scheme, measure or movement which is fraught with benefit to the human race, or any considerable proportion thereof, or that will ameliorate even the condition of the brute world, is admirable, but to ask applause for commonplace performances is the opposite. And yet the latter is too frequently the basis of distinction, built upon ceaseless importunities for notice from the press, and the grasping at every opportunity in that line of advertising. It is no more ridiculous than a man should consider himself great because he can swallow more raw eggs than other people than that he should hope to build a wide-spread and lasting fame upon the fact that he can contain his stomach and a quail every day for thirty days.

A gentleman who is now famous as a poet simply because he writes exquisite poetry, not because he specially sought fame through that or any other channel, retired in disgust twenty years ago from the editorship of a newspaper which his father had made famous and bequeathed to him, because, he said, he was tired of helping to make so many great men out of such poor material.

There is not a newspaper reporter in the land of any experience who has not been frequently solicited by men of apparent respectability to notice in the paper which he represents the fact that this person is going to make a cheap bid for notoriety, or that he is going to create a sensation by doing a commonplace thing in an odd way, or that he contemplates notoriety through the performance of some clownish trick, or hopes for martyrdom through the doing of something in which the world is as little interested as it is in the setting of a hen. Even people who succeed, in a harmless sort of way, in creating a sensation do not frequently succeed in becoming more than a seven days' wonder, and usually less than that.

If people who seek for this sort of ephemeral notoriety will only stick a finger in a tub of water and then draw it out and look for the hole they will have a striking illustration of about how much they amount to, and they will learn a lesson which will give them and a great many other people a much needed rest—Chicago Inter Ocean.

NEW YEAR IN PERSIA.

An Occasion on Which the Shah Appears Bedecked in Precious Gems.

In the presence of the Imams and dignitaries of the court the Shah receives salutations and New Year's greetings, accompanied by effusive and long-winded compliments; the court poet recites an ode or panegyric upon the wisdom and above all the discernment of the King of Kings. Later on the members of the various Corps Diplomatique, after being received by some of the Ministers of State, are admitted into the presence and behold the august countenance of the shadow of God. Although he has a larger collection of jewels than any other monarch, this is one of the few occasions upon which he displays them, for as a rule the Shah dresses plainly and in quiet colors, with only a few diamond buttons on his black cloth coat. But on the New Year His Majesty is usually bedecked in his most magnificent jewels, many of which were brought by the ruthless Nadir Shah from Delhi. His tunic is ablaze with diamonds, his belt, sword and scabbard are encrusted with the same costly gems, and in his hat is the aigrette or distinctive emblem of his royalty. The ceremony is usually not a long one. His Majesty addresses a few words to the Ministers, inquires after the state of their country and the health of their respective sovereigns or Presidents. The distribution of bags of money—which by the by, year by year decrease in value—and the distracting noise of twanging musical instrument announce that the reception is over. The coins presented are contained in tiny silk bags made for the occasion, and consist chiefly of silver as thin as a wafer; sometimes there are a few gold pieces among them about the size of an old silver penny, of not much intrinsic value, but much appreciated in Europe when mounted as ear-rings, buttons and other ornaments.—London Society.

—Gerrod Prescott, aged twelve years, of Biddeford, Me., got into a scuffle with another lad, and the latter threw Gerrod down, and seizing his head between his hands gave it several severe thumps against the hard floor. A day or two after that young Prescott was taken ill and complained of severe pains at the base of his brain. In spite of all remedies that could be given he steadily grew worse until he died.

HOME AND FARM.

—Geese are great grazers, and will eat almost as much as a cow.

—Asthma is sometimes almost instantly relieved by taking a little hot honey.

—Tough dried grass should be used with caution in the hen-yard, as it sometimes causes crop-bound.

—Pretty toilet cushions are made of figured China silk with tiny embroidered blossoms. A six-inch square of silk is used; it is stuffed and surrounded by a roll of wadding. Over this surah is puffed, and is confined at the corners by bows of ribbon. The color may contrast or harmonize.—N. Y. Mail.

—This recipe for brown bread will make a good-sized loaf. Two cups of yellow Indian meal, one cup of rye flour, one cup of graham flour, one cup of New Orleans molasses, three teaspoonfuls of baking-powder, and milk enough to make a stiff batter. Pour into a buttered mold and steam three hours and a half. When done brown in the oven.—The Caterer.

—A very palatable sauce is made of pumpkin. Peel and cook it in a porcelain-lined kettle; pour over the pumpkin enough good sweet cider to cover it, and stew it to a pulp. If the cider is absorbed before the pumpkin is thoroughly done add a little more. If you choose you may add a pinch of powdered spices. This sauce will keep, if made in quantities, for a long time.—Good Housekeeping.

—Keeping apples on shelves is bad practice. A shelf is apt to be high, and thus both dryer and warmer than any other part of the cellar. On the floor, especially of dry cellars, will be found the lowest and most equable temperature for fruit. Russet apples or other very long keepers are best preserved in barrels, putting in none that have bruises or other defects, and only moving when ready for use. Apples in barrels should not be rehandled during the winter, as they are sure to speedily rot thereafter.—N. Y. Examiner.

HORSE AILMENTS.

Valuable Suggestions Submitted by an Experienced Stock Owner.

There are a great many troubles with horses which could be cured without difficulty if they were looked after in time. For instance, a man away out in Colorado writes that his colt has two scabs or sores on its ear and they are growing larger all the time. No doubt this is the beginning of mange, or they may be caused by rubbing the skin off, and then the flies or other insects would keep them irritated.

The simple and sure remedy for all such skin diseases, and especially for mange, is carbolic acid, or its equivalent, found in the sheep dips. For mange the solution should be made quite strong, and it should be well rubbed in so as to penetrate to the very bottom and reach all the vermin at work.

There is nothing better to cure flesh wounds and sores than lard with some salt mixed in it. The lard is healing and the salt cleansing. When there is "proud flesh," as farmers call granulation, then kerosene oil should be mixed with the lard, or carbolic acid, both of which contain the same principle, creosote, and it is this which has the antiseptic effect, that is, the effect to counteract putrescence or decay. All sores and wounds should be treated in this way as soon as discovered, to prevent pus forming and putrefaction, which may be followed by blood poisoning. Sores should be washed with castile soap or the discharge will take the hair off, and the irritation will extend. Putting on salted grease will keep the skin healthy, and the hair will generally come in natural, but if not it will come in white and disfigure the animal. When a horse has these spots of white hair on his breast or back it is a sure sign that he has had hard usage. He has been galled and neglected, and it does not speak well for his owner.

Warts and all such excrescences may usually be gotten rid of by tying a small cord around them, and so cutting off the circulation into them. This is the best way and the surest. When the bunch drops off the wound may be greased over, or, if necessary, touched with some sort of caustic. It is better to let warts or any kind of tumors slough off than to cut them after being tied. There is danger of the cord slipping off and bleeding taking place, whereas if the knife is withheld there is no such danger.

The teeth of horses often cause them a great deal of trouble, and I have no doubt but that the extra teeth called the "wolf teeth" do sometimes affect the nerves of the eyes, and lead to blindness or dimness of sight. It is the notion of some horsemen that shying in horses is generally caused by defective eyesight. In some cases shying horses have been cured of the habit by removing the wolf teeth. It is worth looking after, for a dodger is always dangerous. Driving with blinkers will sometimes keep a horse from shying, especially if he shies from side looks. Some horses always do this, and they are the worst. When they see an object ahead which frighthens them the driver has some warning. but a side shyer takes one unawares unless, knowing its habit, one is always prepared, and this is seldom the case. The horse frightened from some object ahead will do as well and very likely better to have his eyes free. A man should study his horse's peculiarities and be prepared to meet them. Careless driving never is a safe way, for the oldest and safest horse will sometimes get scared.—Farm Journal.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

County Official Paper.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

SATURDAY, APRIL 23 1887

George Stewart, agent for Hall, Luhrs & Co., was at Independence this week. Mr. Stewart is the most popular agent that comes to Inyo county and carries off the lion's share of the business.

No law enacted by Congress in many years has given such general satisfaction as the act recently passed, restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens. None but Americans should own American soil, and every American should own the soil he tills. In Illinois the Legislature is about passing—if it has not already passed—a bill that should be adopted in every other State. This bill provides that hereafter aliens, before being allowed to purchase land in that State, shall declare their intention to become citizens of the United States. Should they fail to take out their naturalization papers within six years thereafter, such lands shall revert to the State.

No American State, with the example of unhappy Ireland before it, can tolerate a system of foreign landlordism.

Very extraordinary scenes have been going on in the English Parliament during the past week. One of the Tory members charged Irish members with being the associates of murderers. Instantly Healy sprang to his feet and called the libeler a willful liar. A scene of wild excitement followed. Healy was suspended for a week. The Tory resumed his speech and repeated the foul charge. Sexton jumped up and called him a willful, cowardly liar, and said if the slanderer would go outside the House he, Sexton, would thrash him within an inch of his life. The uproar began again. When partial quiet was restored the Tory retracted his slanders and Sexton recalled his words. The great body of English workingmen appear to be now in hearty sympathy with the Liberals in their opposition to the tyrannous coercion bill. Great meetings are being held in the large cities in opposition to the measure. The poor of England have discovered that their interests are united with the interests of the poor of Ireland, and that the Irish cannot be oppressed without injury to Englishmen. The desperate straits to which the Tories are driven, and their want of conscience or honor, are proven by the publication in the London Times of letters connecting Parnell with the Phoenix Park murders, of several years ago. These letters are shameless forgeries. The struggle in the English Parliament for justice to Ireland will end in victory for freedom; the greatest of living Englishmen is on the side of right, and enough of his countrymen to decide the issue will follow where he leads.

BISHOP CREEK ACADEMY:

BEGINNING OF SPRING TERM.

The Spring term of the Academy, at Bishop Creek, will begin on Monday, March 28th, 1887.

Full Literary and Classical Academic Courses

Have been arranged, in accordance with which classes will be formed. Classes will also be formed in STUDIES PREPARATORY to those of the Academic Course.

Two prizes will be given during the year for excellence in declamation, also a prize for the highest rank in scholarship.

The Fowler Literary Society,

Formed during the last term, will offer to students of the Academy excellent advantages for literary culture, in addition to the regular work of the school.

TERMS:

The expense of tuition for the term will be $12. This is lower than for institutions of a similar character in other parts of the State. Instructions in music and book-keeping will be extra.

Board and rooms will be furnished to students from abroad. Particulars can be obtained by addressing the Principal.

For any further information address the Principal.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, APRIL 23.....1887.

BORN.

CHURCH—At Independence, April 19th, 1887, to Mr. and Mrs. A. Church, a daughter.

Mr. David Olds, of Round Valley, was at Independence some days this week.

Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Goodale, of Fish Springs, were in town during the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ford, of Bishop Creek, arrived at Independence last Wednesday.

Mr. T. Richards and Mr. G. H. Palmer were up from Lone Pine at the beginning of the week.

A meeting of the Executive Committee on Fourth of July celebration will be held at the beginning of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Walker, of Olancha, arrived at Independence last Thursday and stayed in town a few days.

Mr. N. G. Fairman got back to Independence from San Francisco last Monday. He will soon resume the work of rebuilding at Panamint.

Everybody was sure there would be a wedding; he was willing to deck 'er with a new name, but she is shy and I'd 'no if it 'll come off yet.

County Surveyor McKnight has been engaged during the week in surveying for the canal for the east side colony, from Independence station southward.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr has gone to Reno; there will not be service at the M. E. Church till two weeks from to-morrow. Mr. De La Matyr expects to be back by that time.

There was a row among Indians near town last Wednesday evening. One of the men got cut in the abdomen; he was brought in by the Deputy Sheriff and cared for and does not appear to be seriously hurt.

Adam Fralich, who went from Independence to the East some weeks ago, died soon after reaching his relatives. It will be remembered that David, the brother of Adam, disappeared from Independence last November, and his body was found in the sagebrush a few miles from town about two months afterward.

The Odd Fellows' Ball, which is to take place next Tuesday evening, promises to be a very enjoyable affair. Those having it in charge have spared no pains or expense in perfecting the arrangements, and all those who are fortunate enough to be able to attend will have a pleasant time.

LADIES will find relief from their Costiveness, Swimming in the Head, Colic, Sour Stomach, Headache, Kidney troubles, etc., by taking a dose of Simmons Liver Regulator after dinner or supper, so as to move the bowels once a day. Mothers will have better health and the babies will grow more robust by using the Regulator. If an infant shows signs of Colic, nothing like a few drops in water for relief. The Genuine has the red Z on front of Wrapper.

Last Sunday morning Sol Frankel, the stock broker of Virginia City, was on his way to San Francisco. A man named John Quinn, also of Virginia City, and who had lost money by the failure of the broker, was on the same train. Quinn demanded a settlement of his claim; Frankel said he had not the means to settle; Quinn pulled a pistol and would certainly have shot Frankel had not another passenger seen the move of Quinn and seized hold of the pistol. Others interfered and Quinn quietly gave up the weapon. At Sacramento Quinn left the train but Frankel went on to San Francisco. It is believed that Quinn is on the trail of Frankel and will follow him till he kills him or gets his money. This Frankel and his partners were the means of bringing many people to ruin.

Lumber for Panamint.

Lumber for the mill and other buildings is now at Keeler. There are not sufficient teams to haul the lumber as fast as delivered to the station.

Sampling Works.

Sampling works are now being built at Keeler by Mr. T. C. Boland. This is something that has long been needed there and will prove a great convenience to the miners all over the southern part of the county.

Appeal Dismissed.

In the case of Turner versus McGovern, on appeal from Justice Clark, at Bishop Creek, called in the Superior Court last Tuesday, the appeal was denied on the ground of informality and the case dismissed.

Barb Wire Fence Illegal.

A case has been tried in the Superior Court of Lassen county that is of general interest. One party sued another for damage done to horses by barb wire fence. The fence is built along the public highway, next to the stock range. The plaintiff alleged that his horses were damaged by coming in contact with the fence. The case was tried before a jury and a verdict was given for the plaintiff, the damage being assessed at $575.

Theory vs. Practice.

While the Inter State Commerce Bill was pending in Congress, the Virginia City Chronicle was constant, in season and out of season, urging the passage of the bill. Now that it has become a law, here is what the same Chronicle says of the measure:

"If the new schedule is to be maintained the law will prove a grievous burden instead of a benefit to the people of Nevada and the entire coast. Under the new order of things the old tariff has been doubled on certain classes of freight and quadrupled on others."

Dismissed on Limitation.

The cases of Doctor Blair and Doctor Middleton, charged with practicing medicine without license, were called in the Superior Court last Monday. A. R. Conklin was counsel for the former and W. P. George for the latter. Counsel for each of the accused asked for the dismissal of his client, on the ground that the Code provides that trial must be had within sixty days from the time indictment is brought by the Grand Jury. But in both of these cases ninety days had passed between the indictment and calling for trial. Motion of both counsel was granted, and the charges were dismissed.

Divorce Granted.

In the Superior Court last Wednesday, a decree of divorce was granted to Susan Daniels, on the ground of extreme cruelty of her husband, N. Daniels.

The Band.

All the instruments for the brass band were received last Wednesday. Steps are now in progress to bring a competent band master from San Francisco, who will instruct the band and be engaged permanently as leader.

Supervisors Proceedings.

The Supervisors met to canvass the vote on the amendments to the Constitution. No polls were opened at Cottonwood, Fish Springs, Cerro Gordo, Reiley and Panamint. At all the other precincts the vote was very light. Against amendment No. 1 there is a majority of 87; against No. 2 a majority of 86 and against No. 3 a majority of 50.

Joseph Howard's "Life of Beecher."

Joseph Howard, Jr., the widely known journalist and intimate friend of Henry Ward Beecher for the past fifty years, is engaged upon a life of the great Preacher and Orator, which will no doubt be the standard work, as Mr. Howard's intimate relations with Mr. Beecher, and his justly won popularity as a writer, are an assurance of a work of peculiar interest and value. We learn the work is to be brought out by Hubbard Bros., at an early day, and will no doubt be sold by subscription.

Fell Through.

It was thought at the end of last week that the McMurry and other properties at Big Pine would surely be sold to parties from Bakersfield. The intending purchasers told Mr. McMurry on Sunday morning that they would take the property on the terms he had named, and offered to pay an amount to bind the bargain. He said it would not be necessary to pay anything till the deeds should be made out, and with this understanding the matter rested. Next morning the parties called upon Mr. McMurry again and told him they had concluded not to take the property atall. Last week another party from Kern county came here to buy the same property; but learning that a sale was already in progress they at once withdrew. Mr. McMurry is aged and in poor health; his estate is large and he is not able to manage it to the best advantage; this is his only reason for wanting to sell. The estate would make a very valuable cattle ranch; the land is all excellent and there is abundance of water.

OWENS VALLEY LANDS.

Who the Locators Are.

Last week the Virginia City Enterprise published an article on the work of the Land Office since it was moved to Independence. The assertion was made that the lands were being gobbled up by the old settlers, to be held for speculative purposes. The Enterprise was mistaken, as the following report of the business of the office up to last Tuesday will show. During the eleven days the office had been open up till the day named, the total entries were as follows:

Desert entries by old settlers 600 acres.
Pre-emption entries by new settlers 1440 acres.
Timber Culture entries by new settlers 40 acres
" " " " old " 360 "
Homestead entries by new setters 320 acres.
" " " " " 200 "
" " " Indian " 120 "
Total entries by new settlers 8,120 acres.
" " " old " 1,480 "

These figures prove that the old settlers are not trying to gobble up the land as the Enterprise supposed; and we have not the least doubt that the correction will be published in the same paper with pleasure. It can further be asserted with safety that all of the entries given were made in good faith, and the locators will with as little delay as possible proceed to improve the lands. Of the whole amounts 6,800 acres were located by parties from Reno and Carson. These locators now have surveyors on the ground, making surveys for a canal on the east side of Owens river, from Independence station southward, where all of their land lies. Work on the canal will go on during the summer.

Meeting of Directors.

A meeting of Directors of Agricultural District No. 18 was held at Independence last Thursday. The following Directors were present:—A. R. Conklin, President; Robert Ford, T. J. Goodale, John Shepherd, Nathan Rhine, John W. P. Laird, proxy for Harvey Boone.

Minutes of previous meeting read and approved.

Report of Committee on Constitution and By-Laws read and approved, and Constitution and By-Laws unanimously adopted as read.

The following were appointed a committee on finance:—N. Rhine, H. Boone and A. R. Conklin.

Committee on Library:—R. W. Ford, John Shepherd and C. Mulholland, Secretary.

Visiting Committee:—T. J. Goodale, R. W. Ford and John Shepherd.

Printing Committee:—T. J. Goodale, A. R. Conklin and the Secretary.

On motion, ordered:—That a committee of four be appointed, with full power to select grounds, improve and prepare the same, erect buildings and do all that may be necessary for the care and exhibition of stock, agricultural products and articles of manufacture that may be offered for exhibition at the District Fair. As said committee the following were appointed:—R. W. Ford, N. Rhine, T. J. Goodale and John Shepherd.

The following were appointed a committee on premiums:—T. J. Goodale, R. W. Ford, H. Boone, J. Shepherd, N. Rhine, A. R. Conklin.

There being no further business the meeting adjourned, subject to the call of the Chair.

A. R. CONKLIN,
President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PETITION FOR AN IRRIGATION DISTRICT.

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent, that they and each of them are freeholders owning lands within the boundaries hereinafter fully described and set forth.

That the lands within the said boundaries are susceptible of one mode of irrigation from a common source, to-wit, the Owens River and its tributaries; and by the same system of works.

That your petitioners are desirous of organizing an Irrigation District under the provisions of an act of the General Assembly of the State of California, entitled, "An Act to provide for the organization and government of irrigation districts, and to provide for the acquisition of water and other property, and for the distribution of water thereby for irrigation purposes," approved March 7, 18 7, for the purposes hereinbefore stated, and in said Act provided for.

That the lands proposed to be included in said Irrigation District are situated in the County of Inyo, State of California, and the said boundaries within which said proposed district is situate, are fully described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at the quarter section corner on the line between sections two and eleven in township No. eleven, south, of range No. thirty-four, east, M. D. AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.

JOHN C. EVANS, STOCKLAND, Mo., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take as much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house. If they had to take the feathers from under their wife and babies to pay for it."

JOHN R. DODGE, JR., jeweler, NORMALVILLE, writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. 1st. It is the best machine ever invented by man. 2d. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. 3d. If you run short, you can not buy ours for $100."

"DON'T YOU WORRY."

How Shrewd Business Men Have Solved a Great Problem.

"Is there a fatality among our prominent men?" is a question that we often ask. It is a question that perplexes our leading medical men, and they are at a loss to know how to answer it.

We sometimes think that it the physicians would give part of the energy to the consideration of this question that they give to combatting other schools of practice, it might be satisfactorily answered.

The fights of "isms" reminds us often of the quarrels of old Indian tribes. that were only happy when they were annihilating each other.

If Allopathy makes a discovery that promises good to the race, Homœpathy derides it and breaks down its influence. If Homœpathy makes a discovery that promises to be a boon to the race, Allopathy attacks it.

It is absurd that these schools should fancy that all of good is in their methods and none in any other.

Fortunately for the people, the merit which these "isms" will not recognize, is recognized by the public, and this public recognition, taking the form of a demand upon the medical profession, eventually compels it to recognize it.

Is it possible that the question has been answered by shrewd business men? A prominent man once said to an inquirer, who asked him how he got rich. "I got rich because I did things while other people were thinking about doing them." It seems to us that the public have recognized what this fatality is, and how it can be met, while the medical profession have been wrangling about it.

By a careful examination of insurance reports we find that there has been a sharp reform with reference to examinations, (and that no man can now get any amount of insurance who has the least development of kidney disorder), because they find that sixty out of every hundred in this country do, either directly or indirectly, suffer from kidney disease. Hence, no reliable company will insure a man except after a rigid urinary examination.

This reminds us of a little instance which occurred a short time ago. A fellow editor was an applicant for a respectable amount of insurance. He was rejected on examination, because unknown to himself, his kidneys were diseased. The shrewd agent, however, did not give up the case. He had an eye to business and to his commission, and said: "Don't you worry: you get a half dozen bottles of Warner's safe cure, take it according to directions and in about a month come around, and we will have another examination. I know you will find yourself all right and will get your policy."

The editor expressed surprise at the agent's faith, but the latter replied: "This point is a valuable one. Very many insurance agents all over the country, when they find a customer rejected for this cause, give similar advice, and eventually he gets the insurance."

What are we to infer from such circumstances? Have shrewd insurance men, as well as other shrewd business men, found the secret answer to the inquiry? Is it possible that our columns have been proclaiming, in the form of advertisements, what has proved a blessing in disguise to millions, and yet by many ignored as an advertisement?

In our files we find thousands of strong testimonials for Warner's safe cure, no two alike, which could not exist except upon a basis of truth; indeed, they are published under a guarantee of $5,000 to any one who will disprove their correctness, and this offer has been standing, we are told, for more than four years.

Undoubtedly this article, which is simply dealing out justice, will be considered as an advertisement and be rejected by many as such.

We have not space nor time to discuss the proposition that a poor thing could not succeed to the extent that this great remedy has succeeded, could not become so popular without merit even if pushed by a Vanderbilt or an Astor.

Hence we take the liberty of telling our friends that it is a duty that they owe to themselves to investigate the matter and reflect carefully, for the statements published are subject to the refutation of the entire world. None have refuted them; on the contrary hundreds of thousands have believed them and proved them true, and in believing have found the highest measure of satisfaction, that which money cannot buy, and money cannot take away.

BORROWING MONEY.

Honest Tim's "Compliment" Not Quite Appreciated by a Bank Manager.

Borrowing money is a very favorite practice with the Irish farmer; and until a recent period the banks made the gratification of this taste extremely easy. A Cork car driver lately said to his fare: "Why, sir, a while ago a farmer need only to put on a 'clane' shirt, and go to the bank, and he'd get what he wanted." The expectations, however, of some of the borrowers were too great, as the following incident, which really occurred, very amusingly shows. A certain small farmer, whom we shall call "Tim," for convenience, called upon the manager of the National Bank, in a town in the north-east of the county of Cork. The following dialogue ensued: "Good morning, yer honor, I called about a little business; and though there are other banks in the town, I thought I'd give yer honor the compliment." "Well, Tim, and what is the business?" "Well, yer honor, the interest on Kitty Keeffe's farm is selling off, and I want to 'rise' eight hundred pounds to buy it." "Nonsense, Tim; the interest in her farm isn't worth any thing like that. But suppose I was fool enough to lend you this money, how would you ever pay it back?" Is it pay it agin, yer honor? Nothin' aisier in life, Sure, the young fellow would get in a fortune when he marries." "And may I ask, Tim, what age is the young fellow?" "He's three year's ould yer honor." It need hardly be said that the manager did not see it; and Tim, in spite of his wish "to give him the compliment," was refused the loan of eight hundred pounds.—Spectator.

THE GRANT-HANCOCK TIFF.

Origin of the Estrangement Between the Distinguished Generals.

A well known major general in the army this evening gave the true story of the original quarrel between Grant and Hancock. He said: "The facts, familiar to some of us, and as related by contemporaneous army officers, who, like myself, met the Russell and Dent families and young Lieuts. Grant and Hancock years ago in St. Louis, briefly stated, are these: The Russell family, then living in St. Louis, were rich, becoming so upon profitable army contracts which Miss Russell's father had obtained from the United States government during and after the Mexican war. The Dent family, then residing in the suburbs of St. Louis, was poor. The Russell family 'entertained' splendidly. The Dent family did not mingle in the 'society' of that city, but lived humbly and frugally. The young lieutenants and captains of our regular army, who coveted riches and were fond of elegant society, visited the Russells, admired and some courted the rich and accomplished Miss Russell.

"The gay young officers who coveted riches did not seek Miss Dent, and therefore, it was said, she became just a little bit envious of the much sought young lady. A 'superb' young officer won and carried off the 'rich prize.' Lieut. Winfield Scott Hancock married Miss Russell.' A poor, and not then very prepossessing young officer found favor in the eyes and won the heart of the more humble young lady. Lieut. Ulysses S. Grant married Miss Dent. Though for many years thereafter the homes of those two families were separated by hundreds of miles, yet the members were not lost sight of each to the other. Hancock became personally popular with the people of his home in Pennsylvania, and advanced creditably in the military service; while Grant, not thus favored by fortune, got out of the army and struggled in poverty.

"Now," added the major general, with emphasis, "there in that protracted contrast of positions was planted the seed, long dormant, from which sprung the Grant-Hancock quarrel—envy. Immediately upon the close of the war of the rebellion Hancock was placed in military charge of the District of Columbia, with quarters in Washington. The quartermaster in charge of the district, whose official duty it was to provide Hancock with quarters for his family residence, rented a choice dwelling house in Washington for that purpose, and Gen. and Mrs. Hancock moved into it. There they were residing when along came from Virginia Gen. Grant and his family. Grant outranked Hancock as military commander. According to military rule the superior officer in rank has the absolute choice of quarters, and can, if he will, take possession of those already occupied by his inferior.

"Mrs. Grant, looking around for a residence for her family, came upon the house in which Mrs. Hancock was living. Mrs. Grant told her husband of this discovery and expressed her desire to occupy that house. Gen. Grant so informed the quartermaster, and the latter, as was his official duty, accordingly made known to Gen. Hancock that his family must vacate the premises. Hancock wrote a letter to Grant deprecating that action, remarking, among other things, that there were numerous dwelling houses in Washington equally and some more desirable to be had for the asking. Grant replied in terms which Hancock regarded as discourteous, and in some sentences decidedly offensive. The Hancocks immediately vacated the coveted house and the Grants moved into it.

"Some time thereafter, on Fifteenth street, in front of the treasury department building, Grant and Hancock met. The former, as he afterward stated, was prepared to salute the latter and indicated his purpose. Gen. Hancock observed Gen. Grant, but in a marked manner refused to speak and passed on. This occurrence becoming publicly known some days thereafter Gen. Sherman voluntarily interposed as mediator. A written correspondence between Sherman and Hancock followed, but no reconciliation ever took place between Grant and Hancock, though Grant frequently expressed his regret at the estrangement. Time removed the ascerbity of Hancock's resentment, and he, as we know, was one of the most conspicuous among the distinguished men who attended the funeral of Gen. Grant."

A Smuggler's Shrewd Trick.

"Please to hold my baby while my husband helps me to open my trunks; he will be quite good if you will shake his rattle," said a lady passenger to the officer who was waiting to look over her traveling gear. And that officer good humoredly did as he was requested, shaking the rattle to the great delight of the little one. That rattle in question which, fastened to a ribbon, was tied to the child's waist, was filled with gems of great value, a mode of smuggling that at the time was too simple for detection.—Chambers' Journal.

He Loved His Dog.

A certain little fellow was asked the other day why he so loved a great Newfoundland dog, and the little fellow answered very promptly: "Because Hero is the best Christian I know. He's never mean." This boy had the same feeling about his four footed friend as had that reverend preacher in Milton who used to pray for "man and the more worthy beast."—Boston Post.

LABOR.

The thinker must work and the worker must think,
For both go hand in hand.
And the smithy's stroke and the drop of ink
Make the brawn and brain of the land.

Oh, you at your forge and you at your books,
Be both with your implements striving
To uplift from the dust the kingdom of man
To a higher and holier living.

For the man that toils and the man that thinks
Must work now, shoulder to shoulder,
All labor is holy, if honest it be,
The world has grown wiser and older.

When we lift the man at the desk we lift
The laborer at the plow.
When from a measure of wrong we sift,
Two measures are sifted somehow!
—Joseph Dana Miller.

LIST OF OBSTINATE WORDS.

A Few Words for Which No True Rhyme Has Yet Been Found.

About this time of year many young poets discover that the English language does not lend itself very readily to rhyming. It contains a number of words for which no true rhyme has yet been found, such as silver, chimney, window, spirit, liquid, carpet, window and several others less common.

Valentine writers should procure a list of these obstinate words and thus save themselves a great deal of trouble. Much ingenuity has been expended in forcing rhymes to such words, and occasionally, to the surprise of old rhymers, a rhyme is found to a word long supposed to be rhymeless.

Gen. George P. Morris, author of "Woodman, spare that tree," was long persuaded that no word rhymed with his name, until one evening, challenging the company to produce a rhyme for it, the late John Brougham instantly composed the following stanza:

All hail to thee, thou gifted son,
The warrior poet Morris!
'Tis seldom that we see in one
A Cæsar and a Horace.

Amid the laughter that rewarded this effusion, the poet protested in vain that the rhyme was not absolutely perfect. It proved to be a good enough rhyme for after dinner.

For the word month no fair rhyme, we believe, has yet been found. Some rhymster unknown, however, discovered a rhyme for it in a novel of Thackeray, which he utilized thus;

He tells us of Phil Fogarty, of the fighting Onety-oneth.

A little girl who "lisped in numbers" is said to have produced a better rhyme than this:

I can get a rhyme for month:
I can thay it now; I thed it wunth.

Window has no fair rhyme. An accomplished rhymster knows no such word as fail, and one of this class achieved the following;

Bold Robin Hood, that Archer good,
Shot down fat buck and thin doe;
Rough storms withstood in thick greenwood,
Nor cared for door or window.

Carpet rhymes with no single word, but some bold poet dared to evade the difficulty thus:

Sweet made of the inn,
'Tis surely no sin
To toast such a beautiful bar pet;
Believe me my dear,
Your feet would appear
At home on a nobleman's carpet.
—Youth's Companion.

The Books We Read.

The American Bookseller contains a list of all the books published during the year 1886 for the general trade, and from an examination thereof an excellent idea is obtained of the popular taste in literature. It is a better index, in fact, to that taste than the reports of the public libraries. The latter give only the local demands in various communities of a reasonably select class. The publishers' list includes the whole demand and embraces the literature of a large class which never finds its way to the public libraries.

The list represents 435 publishers, which is exclusive of the legal and medical publishers, the subscription publishers and the societies that publish their own transactions. The works issued by these general publishers number 3,708 in book form, in addition to which there 1,577 of the "libraries," so called. An analysis of the 3,708 books shows that fiction is represented by 482; religion by 471; education, 398; travels and description, 179; history, 123; biography, 115; poetry and drama, 127; art, 177 and juveniles 514, the remainder being miscellaneous and new editions. An analysis of the "libraries" shows the taste of another class, the class that revels in cheap literature. The 1,551 "library" volumes are mostly reprints of the latest and best English novels, some 500 volumes being devoted to "blood and thunder" sensations, or stories of "injuns" by our own American writers. In the entire list all but 69 are works of fiction.—Detroit Free Press.

Invention of Bank Notes.

The Chinese invented bank notes in the Ninth century and called them "flying money," but the currency became so inflated that two centuries later a £20 note would only purchase a pound of rice. When Sir John Mandeville visited China in the Fourteenth century the emperor issued leather money—"which his majesty spent most outrageously"—and some years later the currency was transferred to a joint stock bank of Chinese merchants, who ultimately failed, and paid only two shillings on the pound.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Not a New Device.

Limp leather binding is used largely in devotional books, closing tightly and shutting them in as if slipped into a leather bag. It is looked upon as a new device, which in fact it is a relic of the parchment age. The parchment rolls were put in a covering, drawn like a purse string, carried by the owner or attached to his girdle. It was the "book bag" sometimes seen in the old cuts, held by the string, as the devout owner pursued her way to public worship.—Philadelphia Bookseller.

Submarine Photography.

Taking negatives of the bottom of the sea, sunken wrecks or submarine works is said to be the latest attempt of photographers. This is to be accomplished by the aid of electric light; divers may be employed, or by electric arrangements the negatives may be taken from above water.—Chicago Times.

—Paymaster Milton B. Cushing, a retired officer of the navy, who died recently, was an older brother of the famous Commander William B. Cushing, whose destruction of the rebel ram Albermarle was one of the most daring acts of the war. There were four brothers, all of whom are now dead and mourned for by their aged mother, who still lives, at the age of seventy-eight, with her daughter in Missouri.—Chicago Tribune.

—E. G. Spalding, the man who framed the Legal-Tender act, is still living in Buffalo. He is nearly eighty years of age. At the breaking out of the war he was a leading member of the lower house of Congress. His famous bill, known as the Legal-Tender act, was slightly altered before its introduction by Secretary Chase and Mr. Lincoln. The original bill is now in the possession of its author. Mr. Spalding is a bank president, and is worth ten million dollars.—Buffalo Express.

—A visitor in Dublin was asked by a cardriver if he wanted a car. "No," said he; "I am able to walk." "May your honor long be able, but seldom willing," was the witty rejoinder.

—Johnnie Hardnut gets about as many whippings every day as there are school hours, and yesterday the teacher caught him at his tricks as usual. "You naughty boy," she said, "if you do that again I'll whip you." "Chestnut," he replied impudently. "Hickory is better, I think," she remarked quietly, and gave him about half a cord across the back.—N. Y. Sun.

IF WE KNEW.

But we don't know. We sometimes criticise our neighbor's short-comings when we do not know the disadvantages under which he suffers. If he has lost an arm, or if he is so lame that he has to walk on crutches, we can see his infirmity and pity him accordingly. If he is subject to some nervous disorder, which does not affect his gait nor make any great difference in his outward appearance, he has very little sympathy from any one. He may have some tremendous weight of mental worry oppressing him, but he gets no pity from those who know nothing about it and cannot appreciate the hidden troubles under which he labors. Thousands of men have made failures of their lives from carrying burdens of worry and vexation which distracted their nerves, demoralized their brains, and wrecked them beyond remedy. It would be well for all such to remember that Compound Oxygen cures nervous depression, insomnia, neuralgia, and all ills which make life a burden. Hundreds of cases are on record in which this gentle and powerful agent has worked wonders. Drs. Starkey & Palen, of 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., send a treatise giving these reports free to all applicants.

Cincinnati is bragging about putting up a new Court House without having a dollar stolen. It seems the days of miracles have not disappeared.

A GENIAL RESTORATIVE.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are emphatically a genial restorative. The changes which this great botanic remedy produces in the disorded organization are always agreeably, though surely progressive, never abrupt, and violent. On this account it is admirably adapted to persons of delicate constitution and weak nerves to whom the powerful mineral drugs are positively injurious. That it initiates those processes which result in the re-establishment of healthful vigor is conspicuously shown in cases where it is taken to overcome that fruitful cause of debility, indigestion, coupled, as it usually is, with biliousness and constipation. Thorough digestion, regular evacuation and abundant secretion, are results which promptly and invariably attend its systematic use. It is, besides, the best protective against malaria, and a first rate diuretic.

If an energetic hen is on the wrong lay she ought to be set right.

THE HOUSEKEEPER'S COMPLAINT.

"I am discouraged. I have too much to do. I am tired. I am sick. I suppose I was put into this house too keep it clean, but it is too much work. I won't try. I will go to sleep. I don't care what becomes of the house."

The above is an allegory. The discouraged housekeeper is the liver, which, indeed, is often called "the housekeeper of our health." If it does go to sleep as it threatened, a crowd of diseases are all ready to spring up as a consequence. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" acts upon the liver and assists it in its work of housekeeping and house-cleaning. It is the great liver remedy and blood cleanser, and cures all the long train of chronic maladies resulting from a torpid or sluggish, sleepy liver, such as sick-headache, scrofulous diseases, as ulcers, "fever-sores," "white swellings," hip-joint disease, consumption of the lungs (which is really only scrofula manifesting itself in the delicate tissues of these organs), also all skin diseases, as blotches, pimples and eruptions, and all blood taints, however acquired.

No address that ever wasn't delivered is believed to have attracted more attention than Mr. Lowell's on "American Politics."

THE NATIONAL DISEASE DOWNED.

Hundreds of so-called diseases under various names are the result of indigestion, and when this one trouble is removed the others vanish. The best known remedy for indigestion, according to thousands of testimonials, is one that has been used in the United States for more than fifty years—Brandreth's Pills. These Pills will cure the worst form of indigestion or dyspepsia, and by their use the national disease is easily conquered.

BEAUTIFUL CORFU.

And thus, between these islands and "Albania," the good ship proceeds to Corfu, that garden of the Mediterranean, and anchors in its beautiful land-locked bar, exactly twelve hours after leaving Brindisi. One gasps in the effort to describe these lovely spots of earth. Dante is far more impressive when his genius puts forth its strength in the "Inferno" than when he writes his "Paradiso;" and similarly one does not feel the limitations of one's powers in the attempted depiction of the commonplace. But it is with Corfu as with sweet Helen of Troy, who paralyzed the pen, and was best to be seen portrayed in the wonder and admiration of those who were privileged to come face to face with her. One leans over the side of the ship, and, as it were, absorbs in silence into one's system the soft contour of its many-sided hills; the stately grace of its cypresses growing in the town and cresting the dark rock which, even as a fortress, impresses with its solemnity rather than its strength; the mellow color of its old Venetian houses, green and white, soaring high against the blue heavens; the clamor of its boatmen, discordant enough when one has a personal interest in the hubbub, but otherwise merely strange sounds in a strange place; the orange sails of its fishing-boats at anchor in the bay, their big prows carved with uncouth saints and figures; the ruined islands hard by, and the distant rocks of the Lazzaretto against a background of deep foliage where gardens and orange-groves run to the water's edge; the Venetian campaniles of its churches; the villas and villages nestling in the nooks of the hills and the mountains, two thousand feet and more above the sea level; and the majestic gray hills with their snow-capped attendants on the Albanian shore, which, at a distance of five or six miles, form a firm bar on the eastern side of the harbor. There can be no more beautiful port in the world than this of Corfu. To appreciate the disinterestedness of the British Government, one ought to see Corfu. No individual would have given away such a property so freely, even though it seemed ever so reasonably demanded of him.—All the Year Round.

STANLEY'S HABITS.

How the Great Explorer Preserved His Health Under Trying Circumstances.

"I am now forty-four years of age," said he, "and spite of all the hardships endured upon my travels through 'The Dark Continent,' I have never felt better in my life."

"And you attribute this to what?"

"To the accumulation of information on correct habits of health."

"How did you come to take interest in the subject?"

"I didn't begin to study health for the sake of the study. It was in the course of special work I came to New York in 1867 and was sent by Mr. James Gordon Bennett, of the New York Herald, to accompany General Napier's expedition to Abyssinia."

"Then your education in health laws began?"

"Yes, practically. I had not thought much about the subject before, even then it was not a deep study. I only saw how much work could be done with simple habits. I used no liquor; my food consisted of meat, procured by the slaughter of the cattle of the country, and a common dark bread, made from millet, and milk. I was not a day ill from the beginning until the expedition returned home in May, 1868. In the Cretan revolution, 1868, I also represented the New York Herald, and my health experience was the same. I had plenty of plain food, meats, rye bread and milk. In the early part of 1869 I went to Spain for the Herald. It was the time of the Carlist war. My habits continued still about the same."

"Were you able to bathe regularly?"

"Certainly. I used a tepid bath every morning when spending some time in one place, and regularly at the end of a march. I have always used a rough towel vigorously after bathing, and find the exercise and friction most agreeable. * * * At Zanzibar I formed an expedition for the finding and relief of Dr. Livingstone. I employed two white men and 200 natives. One of the white men, Shaw, had been mate of an American ship, and the other, Farquahar, mate of an English ship. Both had been accustomed to hardship, but were fond of liquor. It was the awful consequences attending their indulgence in it that first aroused my attention to the effect of alcoholic stimulants in Africa. I sent Farquahar forward a few miles to form camp, and when paying up the hotel and other bills, found that he had drank up eighteen bottles of brandy before starting. The effect upon him was still visible after we had journeyed 150 miles. He then became dropsical and died. Shaw had been helping him to consume the brandy at Zanzibar. He was morose, and when he could get no more left me at Unyanyembe, 500 miles march. His object was to find an opportunity to drink to his heart's content of the stale beer obtainable there. I heard that he, in delirium I suppose, put an end to his life. I continued my journey with the natives until I found Livingstone, in a few weeks afterward. He was lodged at a place within 900 miles of Zanzibar, to reach which it took me eight months. In the course of our conversation he said: 'Wine and women have been the curse of the white man in Africa.' By wine he meant every intoxicating beverage of the country."

"Was Dr. Livingstone a teetotaler?"

"In Africa he never touched liquor of any kind!"

"What was the nature of the fare you were able to procure on your way through the country?"

"Your next expedition to Africa was—"

"In 1874. Three Englishmen accompanied me. I took the trouble to inquire regarding their habits, to make sure that they were temperate, having already had a sad experience with intemperate men. We had in our stores twelve bottles of pure brandy from Zanzibar, on an expedition that might have lasted from three to ten years. One was broken and spilled and six were consumed for medical purposes. They were disposed of in this way. One was given to the men suffering from dysentery, two were consumed by the white man, Pocock, who died of typhoid fever; the stimulant kept him up for two weeks; the youngest white man Baker, got one bottle; he also died. The elder Pocock was then the only white man left to me. In the course of a year he and the colored people consumed two bottles. At the end of two years and nine months five bottles remained. These we buried at Nyangwee, thinking that we might want them on our return, for we then did not know but that, like other travelers, we might be driven back by native hostilities. This, however, was not our fortune, and we continued the voyage down the river Lualaba until we emerged on the Atlantic. The five bottles of brandy, for aught I know, still remain where we left them."

"Did you drink any of the brandy?"

"The whole time, three and a half years, I may have taken ten tablespoonfuls of it."

"What kind of food did you use?"

"Mutton, beef, goat meat, game, sweet potatoes, pumpkins, bananas, peanuts, tea, coffee and milk."

"Was your appetite always good?"

"Yes, save when in fever. I was nine months in the wildest parts of Africa without a symptom of disease. This good fortune I attribute to the increase of knowledge concerning health habits, the indulgence in simple food, the bath, and judicious exercise."

"Did you sleep well?"

"Until toward the end. The great sense of responsibility disquieted my mind, and I lost sixty-three pounds in weight. When I started I weighed one hundred and eighty pounds, when I returned I was only one hundred and seventeen. The nervous activity was such that I could not sleep—no, not even after I had paced for hours outside the camp, in the hope of wooing it by fatigue."—Herald of Health.

DISAGREEABLE TRAITS.

How Many Good Men and Women Make Themselves Unpopular.

"There are people," said an old divine, "who lead us heavenward, but they stick pins in us all the way." Of these was a certain English poet, whose hymns have strengthened many a fainting soul. But the poet had such a habit of sniffling and hawking, that his best friends could scarcely endure his company. Of these, too, was a well-known American woman, foremost in the last generation as a reformer and philanthropist. Nobody ever doubted her purity of soul or the power of her intellect; her name now is cited as that of one of the most brilliant conversers which America ever produced. But in reality she talked as soon as she had a moment's cessation, raising her voice to drown any reply which was ventured. Friend and foe wearied of the never-ending clatter, of which "I" was both the center and circumference. Of this unfortunate class, too, are many obscure good people, such, for example, as Godfrey C——. He began, like Hercules, to be a hero in his cradle. Even as a baby he was generous, and bore pain without a whimper. As a man he was large-natured, liberal, the leader in every helpful work in his State, faithful to his family, for whom he drudged until his strength failed from overwork and he died in middle age. Yet it taxed the patience of friend, wife or child to be an hour in the company of this earnest, affectionate man. He would bang doors, he would clap a sick woman on the back, he would shout out inquiries as to your deafness or poverty before a room full of people; he shoveled his food into his mouth with his knife, he wore coats and shirts stained with tobacco, he discussed your private affairs whenever he met you. Yet he never understood why his wife was ashamed of him, or why his children managed to keep him out of their little parties. He went to his grave with a sore heart because of these hurts.

Much of the misery of life comes to men and women because of little disagreeable traits which obscure their real character, precisely as a mist does a fine mirror. Such traits are usually only the result of a stubborn self-will. They are petty habits, acquired in childhood, which the boy refuses to give up simply because they are his own. God, who sees the heart, looks beneath these outward appearances, but the world too often sees no deeper than the surface, and judges the man by them.—Youth's Companion.

—"Madame," he began, as he lifted his hat at the front door, "I am soliciting for home charities. We have hundreds of ragged and rude children like those at your gate, and our object is"—"Sir, those are my own children." And the front door was violently slammed to.

—"Oh! I've loved before!" said a six-weeks' bride to her fourth husband, as she took a handful of hair from his head because he refused to hang out the week's washing.—Hartford Sunday Journal.

HOME AND FARM.

—Gather the droppings around and under the roosts every two or three days if you would have your poultry free from the scourge of scaly legs.—N. Y. Examiner.

—Nice cookies are made with one cup of butter, two cups of sugar, three eggs, two teaspoonfuls each of baking powder and boiling water, and flour enough to knead as soft as can be rolled out.—Boston Budget.

—Beaten Biscuit: Two pints of flour, one teaspoon of salt, one tablespoon of lard, mix into a stiff dough with equal parts of water and milk; beat thirty minutes with a wooden spoon; bake in a quick oven.—The Household.

—Excellent Baked Brown Bread: Three cups of Indian meal, three cups of rye meal, one-half cup of sour milk, one-half cup of molasses, three and one-half cups of warm water, one teaspoonful of soda. Bake, covered close, one and one-half hours.—Exchange.

—Ordinary building paper is cheap and of great value to keep cold out of all farm buildings. It may be nailed on, with lath covering the seams, pressing them close to the wall. The paper may also be utilized for covering a screen door, making it serve the purpose of a double door to exclude cold.—Detroit Tribune.

—Crumb griddle cakes: The night before using put some bread crumbs to soak in one quart of sour milk; in the morning rub through a sieve and add four well-beaten eggs, two teaspoons soda dissolved in a little water, one tablespoon melted butter and enough cornmeal to make them the consistency of ordinary griddle cakes. It is better to beat yolks and whites separately, stirring the whites lightly in just before baking.—Boston Bulletin.

—It is a good plan to wash horses' necks and shoulders with cold water after the day's work in spring and summer. It will strengthen them and prevent lameness and galling. This is especially necessary if the horses have not done much work in winter and are then set to work suddenly in spring. If a horse be sick or lame or swelled, bathing will often improve it. If the parts affected be cold, then let the water be a little warm; but if the parts be warm, let the water be cold. Some salt dissolved in the water will add to its efficiency.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—German Bread: One pint of boiled milk, one-half tea-cup of sugar, one-half cup of lard, two-thirds of a cup of yeast. Mix the yeast and milk and let rise light; add the sugar and shortening, with flour enough to make a soft dough; roll out an inch thick on a well-floured board. Divide the dough and put each in a baking tin; make a dozen indentures with the finger on the top, put a small piece of butter in each and sift over the whole one tablespoonful of sugar mixed with the same quantity of ground cinnamon. Let stand till light, then bake in a quick oven.—The Caterer.

—Looking to spring and transplanting, we say: First dig your holes and supply mellow, rich soil in place of all the poor soil that comes out of them. Years ago, when the Rural grounds were planted, muck from what is now the lake was the soil used to fill in the holes. There is muck and muck, no doubt. But a thriftier line of trees, both evergreen and deciduous, than we have, is rarely to be found. The roots of young trees soon grow out of the hole prepared for their reception; but a good start in the case of a tree is more important and helpful than in the case of a corn plant.—Western Rural.

WHOLESOME BUTTER.

Cleanliness in the Dairy Indispensable to Its Production.

Cleanliness is particularly essential in the dairy, where the introduction of any foul or even foreign matter vitiates the product, both in value and healthfulness, as well as in appearance, and this is most especially true in regard to butter.

The best butter comes from the most intelligent and observing operators. Stupidity never makes good butter. Intelligence is always a valuable constituent in the qualifications of the operatives of any industry, but it is indispensable in the fine art of butter-making. Innocent consumers are often made the victims of filthy and unwholesome practices, simply because the operatives in the dairy have not intelligence enough to distinguish between what is not filthy and detrimental, or, if they have the ability, they neglect to use it. Thus dairymen frequently do unwittingly what they would scorn and most sedulously avoid if they had a clearer appreciation of the consequences their conduct involves.

How common an occurrence it is for cows to be driven into the barn while it is raining, and the milkers at once begin milking, while the water, loaded with perspiration ready dissolved, is dripping down the sides of the cows and falling into their pails, so that, wet or dry, the perspiration gets into the milk. Now, these milkers are good and well-meaning people. They would do their work better if they appreciated the evil effects of their practices, but they do their work mechanically and do not take the trouble to think about it.

It would require but little thinking to enable these well-intending milkers to understand what is plainly true, that that accumulated perspiration is the concentrated waste—the dead and effete matter of the cows' bodies—and the most foul and offensive of animal excretions, and that it gives off the most pungent odor. A very little of it will suffice to season a large batch of milk.—National Live-Stock Journal.

NOTES ON ETIQUETTE.

How You Can Make Yourself Popular with Friends and Strangers.

When you are invited to dine at the house of a friend or acquaintance, it is not considered good form to reply that you would enjoy it above all things; but, unfortunately, you are very hungry and do not see how you can possibly accommodate him. At all events, never make matters worse by adding that you will be pleased to come some other time—on Fast Day, for instance.

On being asked to "take something," whatever that may mean, it is hardly proper to inform the inviter that your stomach has some rights which you are bound to respect, and if it is all the same to him, you will take as an equivalent the money which the "something" would cost.

As the generality of mankind stands in pressing need of exercise, it is a duty you owe to society to furnish others with all the exercise you can possibly vouchsafe to them. Hence, when walking the streets, trail your cane or umbrella, so that the man behind you shall be kept hopping and skipping about like an insane kangaroo, in order to keep himself from tripping over your offensive weapon.

It has been pointed out that the seats in a rail car are death-traps which have a fashion of shutting up and holding the occupant until the fire in the overturned stove has time to cremate him or her; consequently it will be seen that you do a kindness to others, especially to women, by preventing them, if possible, from obtaining seats. If they are made to stand, of course they escape the dangers incident to the perilous seat. The knowledge of having performed a kind act always fills one with supreme pleasure, especially when he can contemplate his good act in a comfortable position.

As it is very trying to one's eyes to read print in the cars, it is proper for you to prevent your neighbor from injuring his eyesight by reading his newspaper. Therefore put a stop to his reading, either by talking to him continually about something—no matter what, so that it interests yourself—or read to him detached sentences and "good things" from your own paper. He may not thank you; but what of that? Because he is ungrateful, must you therefore forget your duty to your fellow man?

When you are enjoying your cigar alone, and a friend drops in tell him you would ask him to smoke, but you fear that the smoke of two such cigars would suffocate both of you. Your friend will greatly enjoy your pleasantry, and he will also be happy because of the opportunity you have given him to inform all his acquaintances, and all yours, that you smoke mighty poor cigars. Besides, you save a cigar.

When one is telling you a long and dry story about the way his housemaid goes on, put on a melancholy look and put a stop to his story at the earliest convenient moment by asking him some irrevelant question, as, for example, what he thinks of the late strike, what his opinions are of a possible war in Europe, or what are his views on white mice or the eventual restoration of the Jews. Your doleful face will show him that you sympathize deeply in his sufferings, and your clever turning of the subject of conversation will convince him, if he had any doubts before, that his story is too painful for you to listen to it.

When the shopman has given you too much money in change, say nothing, but put the money in your pocket. It is always mortifying to be told of one's errors. Then it should be remembered the opportunities of being paid for one's forbearance are too infrequent to be neglected.

These are only a few of the many nice points of etiquette that might be mentioned; but they will suffice to show that one who knows nothing about etiquette can write as well upon that subject as upon any other with which he is equally unacquainted.—Boston Transcript.

CIGAR STUMP SALES.

The Remarkable Industry Carried On by Enterprising Parisians.

Among the curiosities of Paris is the market for cigar stumps in the Place Maubert. Megot, by profession a collector of these stumps, initiated me one fine morning into the mysteries of his peculiar calling. Every day from eight to ten a. m. the market is full of life. A kilogramme (two and one-fifth pounds) of stumps from Londres' cigars is worth 30 cents to 50 cents, according to the length of the stump. The ends of cigars at 1 and 2 cents each only bring from 15 cents to 30 cents a kilogramme. There are four or five wholesale dealers in cigar stumps, who have their headquarters in the wine shops of the vicinity, and who there deal with the furnishers, mostly poor old men and women and ragged boys. Some 500 persons earn their living after this fashion. The amount annually produced by the traffic is said to reach $150,000. Much of the tobacco thus scraped together is sold to workmen, and much is also said to be exported under the title of "Tabac de Paris." There is one old fellow in the Maubert quarter who, some years ago, became so rich at this humble business of selling cigar stumps that he had an annual income of $3,000. But my friend Megot turned out badly. Not satisfied, I suppose, with what he was able to glean by the public way, he was recently caught in the act of stealing in the shop of a tobacconist. He said, by way of excusing himself, that he had never heard of a law which forbade taking snuff. This, on a pinch, might pass for an excuse; but the Paris police are a big-headed lot, and wouldn't see the joke. They walked poor Megot off to a vile place of durance which they here call "a fiddle."—Jean Nicot, in Milwaukee Sentinel.

ANCIENT GOLD-DIGGERS.

Remarkable Ruins Found in Africa Among the Huts of the Savages.

Some way south of the Zambesi river there is a large region, extending from the sea nearly 400 miles inland, and 300 to 400 miles toward the south, in which ruins are constantly being discovered, proving that in prehistoric times the country was inhabited by a civilized people. To-day only the rudest black tribes inhabit this land, save in a few places where the Portuguese have established stations. The little bee-hive huts of the natives are seen among massive ruins betokening a degree of architectural skill which rivals that of the ancient Aztecs. Our knowledge of these ruins is still far from perfect. Our earliest records of travels and trade on the east African coast, extending back to the beginning of the Christian era, do not mention them. Only in recent years have the travels of Selous, Erskine, Mauch, Baines, Mohr and O'Neill revealed to us the monumental evidence this country contains.

The coast town Sofala is shown on all maps of East Africa. Near that town Carl Mauch found extensive ruins remarkable for their enduring nature and strange shapes. There are partly ruined walls, still thirty feet high and twelve feet wide at the base, built of small hewn blocks of granite. In these walls, some times fifteen to twenty feet from the ground, are imbedded one end of blocks of stone eighteen to twenty feet long, which were evidently used to support galleries. Here and there, built in the walls or standing by themselves, are round stone towers which evidently rose to heights of thirty to fifty feet. Similar masses of masonry are found as far as three hundred and fifty miles inland and a little north near the coast.

It is not positively known yet who built these ancient structures. No trained archæologist has visited them, and no search has yet been made for the inscriptions, though O'Neill says he has no doubt from what he has recently heard that there are numerous inscriptions on the ruins about Manica. All these ruins are surrounded by surface gold mines. It is believed that all this country was occupied some time before the Christian era by a great colony, probably of Phœnician origin, and that its chief occupation was gold mining.

Mr. O'Neill says that these numerous ruins are nearly as well preserved as those of Assyria. Some day, no doubt, they will be systematically studied. Their existence shows conclusively that a large region in inner Africa, now given up to savage men and wild beasts was subject many centuries ago to the control of a people who were considerably advanced in the arts of civilization.—*N. HIS BOYHOOD'S DAYS.

An Artist Relates Some of the Reminiscences of His Childhood.

Out in the village where I was born we had a crowd of boys whose life was a continual round or pleasure, as I look back upon it now. Swimming, boating, hunting, wandering in the fields with a boy's proprietary feeling of ownership of the whole earth equal to Jay Gould's and an ignorance of everything equal to an art critic's, we still got into mischief. "Si" Pickering's father owned a calf which roamed in the field behind the barn. On this calf our wicked eyes fell one day and we organized an Indian deer hunt. Theo Beck and Joe Doty drove the calf into the lane, where about a dozen of us were scattered along behind the fence, armed with bows and sharp arrows. The calf, or deer, as it was supposed to represent, came ambling friskily along, when the Indians opened fire. With a startled bellow it dashed past down the lane, followed by fierce, blood curdling war whoops, to where "Si" stood with an old gun loaded with bird shot. "Si" was representing a white settler and was expected to shoot in the air, of course; but in the intense excitement of the moment, as he saw the deer plunging toward him, with eight or nine arrows sticking in him in the region of the tail, he shot his hide full of small holes. At this interesting moment his "old man" rode up and "Si's" face was a picture of surprise. He seemed quite agitated as the old man reached for him in an earnest manner. I was getting well toward the next county at the time, but I heard "Si's" explanatory remarks even after I was in the woods. The calf lived to be a respectable, sober old cow, yet I never could look upon her white face in after years without recalling "Si" floating in the air as his father held him aloft by his suspenders and fondled him in the most approved biblical manner.—W. H. McDougall in New York World.

—Miss Julia Malcolm, a school teacher of New Haven, Conn., has accepted an offer of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars for land in Colorado, which was jokingly deeded to her several years ago by a friend who considered it valueless.—Hartford Courant.

NAVAL ARTILLERY.

Zalinski's Gun Pronounced an "Infernal Triumph of American Ingenuity."

It was not to be expected that a country in which mechanical genius has reached such a development as in the United States, having finally decided to set to work in earnest on the task of coast defenses, would be content merely to adopt the systems of other nations. Something new and original in this line was naturally to be looked for; and new and original devices have not been slow in presenting themselves. Ericsson's Destroyer and Lieutenant Zalinski's dynamite-gun have made their appearance most opportunely. The first appropriation voted by Congress with a view to the creation of a real navy and for the construction of guns and forts will, no doubt, be followed by others. But years must elapse before the results will be visible to the eyes either of the American people or of their possible foes. In the meantime, the dynamite-gun cruiser—and we trust other vessels of the same type—will have been launched; and these, together with Captain Ericsson's submarine artillery, may suffice to protect the country by the natural dread which the unknown always inspires.

Lieutenant Zalinski expects that the gun cruiser will be able to discharge from its three guns, in the course of a single attack, thirty-four hundred pound shells at a maximum range of two miles, making a total of twelve thousand pounds of nitro-gelatine exploded upon or in the immediate neighborhood of an enemy's ship. The London Times declares that this is "the most infernal triumph of American ingenuity." But it is questionable whether Captain Ericsson's Destroyer is not an equally infernal triumph. The submarine gun with which the Destroyer is armed has, its inventor states, "not failed in a single instance during a long series of trials to expel the submarine projectile with a velocity exceeding three hundred feet in three seconds"—an extraordinary velocity when the resistance of the water is considered, and far exceeding that of any foreign torpedo. The caliber of the gun is sixteen inches. The projectile is twenty-five feet in length and carries three hundred pounds of gun cotton, "a charge sufficient," says Captain Ericsson, "to shatter the hull of ironclad ships of all classes so completely that the boasted 'water-tight compartments' will prove of no avail in preventing destruction and sinking."

With guns throwing four hundred pounds of dynamite above, and three hundred pounds of gun cotton below the water, the United States can proceed to the construction of a navy and of coast fortifications without fearing that, if forced into war before the completion of these works, the country will be found altogether unprepared.—N. O. Times-Democrat.

SALMON IN ALASKA.

Their Number Beyond the Belief of Those Who Have Never Seen Them.

The number of salmon in these Alaskan streams, whether they empty into the Arctic or Behring Sea, or the Pacific Ocean, is simply beyond belief to a person who has never seen them with his own eyes. In ascending one of the small streams that empties into the Pacific Ocean, from the Saint Elias Alps, in a canoe, manned by a couple of Indians, the salmon were so plentiful that they formed a solid semi-circle in front of the canoe, with its bow as a center, and a radius of about twenty feet, and this semi-circle looked like the ripples of a small cascade, the protruding noses, backs and fins corresponding to the small stones that would project through such a waterfall. We had no salmon spear, but one of the Indians made one from a pole, cut from the bank, on the end of which he whittled a rude barb. This was too fragile, however, until the end was hardened by burning it in the fire, when it became much better, when a few salmon were secured, losing a dozen, nevertheless, to where one was captured by the extemporized spear. Wherever we ran the vast swarm against a shallow ripple, where it was hard for so many to get over in a hurry, great numbers of them would go scurrying past us on either side, making as much splashing as a flock of ducks, and giving the Indian a good chance to use his spear. Hundreds of these fish were seen that had great ugly scars on them caused, my Indian guide said, by the spears of the numerous Indian fishermen who, at that season, were putting in their winter supply of salmon, and whose weapons were far from always being effective. We killed a number with a Winchester rifle from the shock by a shot on the water, directly over their heads, which never failed to turn them belly upward at once, and before they recovered they were safely landed in the canoe.—Lieutenant Schwatka, in American Field.

—A powder that is composed chiefly of phosphorus, and designed to supplant ordinary gunpowder for stage purposes, has been devised by a New York inventor, who, as a test of its qualities, placed himself in the midst of a dozen or more "supers" at a theatre a day or two ago, and permitted them to blaze away at him with their muskets only a few inches from his head. It is put up in cartridges so thin that when discharged the whole charge completely disappears. No trace of it can be found. The report is described as being as loud, the flame as vivid and the smoke appearantly as dense as that of ordinary gunpowder, but it has the advantages of giving forth no odor.—N. Y. Tribune.

CURIOSITIES OF ALLOYS.

Some of the Difficulties Experienced in the Working of Gold.

The way in which an alloy of gold and copper or other metal is affected by a small quantity of impurity presents one of the most serious difficulties with which our case-makers and jewelers have to deal in working gold. It has long been known to workers in the precious metal that minute quantities of certain metals render it brittle and unworkable; and referring to this, in a lecture at Birmingham, Prof. Roberts-Austen, of the Royal Mint, said:

"It may be well to demonstrate the fact. Here are two hundred sovereigns. I will melt them, and will add, in the form of a tiny shot, a minute portion of lead amounting to only the two thousandth part of the mass; first, however, pouring a little of the gold into a small ingot, which we can bend and flatten, thus proving to you that it is perfectly soft, ductile, workable. The rest of the mass we will pour into a bar; and now that it is sufficiently cold to handle, you see that I am able to break it with my fingers, or, at least, with a slight tap of a hammer. The color of the gold is quite altered, and has become orange brown; and experiments have shown that the tenacity of the metal—that is, the resistance of the gold to being pulled asunder—has been reduced from eighteen tons per square inch to only five tons. These essential changes in the property of the metal have been produced by the addition of a minute quantity of lead."

In the same lecture Professor Roberts-Austen said: "Here is a bar of tin, two feet long and one inch thick, which it would be most difficult to break, though it would readily bend double. If only I rub a little quicksilver on its surface, a remarkable effect will be produced—the fluid metal will penetrate the solid one, and in a few seconds the bar will, as you see, break readily, the fractured surface being white, like silver."—Scientific American.

THE PORTRAIT.

MALCOLM GRÆME.

Vain is the art which would portray
The changing lights that ever play
Upon thy lovely face;
Now mirthful looks, now sad and grave,
Each chased by a succeeding wave
Of winning, maiden grace.

There is engraven on my heart,
An image truer far than art—
'T is not always the same;
When I am sad your tender eyes,
Answer mine in sweet replies,
And sympathy proclaim.

When my mood is gayer, sweet,
A coy, shy glance will my eyes meet,
Entrancing me with bliss;
Around thy lips a 'witching smile
Strays so coquettishly the while,
I steal a ling'ring kiss.

Hence, vain dreams, do not deceive me!
Ah, if I could but believe thee,
Whatever might betide,
Dearest, could it ever be thus,
Though Sierras rise between us,
I'd hasten to thy side.

Tell me, loved one, are my dreams
But false lights and broken beams,
From the ivory gate? §
Or are they from the gates of horn,
To calm a mind with anguish torn,
And bid me know my fate.

§ The ancient Greeks believed that the Dreams were confined in a temple with two gates, one of ivory and one of horn. From out the ivory gate came those illusions which deceive mankind; from the gate of horn came the visions which foretold future events.

The Sacramento Bee is still ding-donging on the Kissane matter—a column article on a subject that is getting monotonous, and a half column leader inflicting the story of the Bee's wondrous enterprise on a long-suffering public.

Isn't it about time some dear, darling, soft-hearted—soft-headed—creature is starting a petition for the pardon of that travesty of a man, Alex. Goldenson, sentenced to a too humane death for the fiendish murder of little Mamie Kelley? Surely such a blessed opportunity will not be neglected.

It is a difficult matter to understand in what manner the Pacific Coast is to be benefited by the Interstate Commerce law. Railroad and people alike unite in condemning it. Were it possible for manufacturing industries to grow to such proportions that there would be home consumption for all our products, then it might benefit us. But this is entirely out of the question. California raisins were beginning to obtain such a hold on the Eastern market as to drive the foreign product from the field. The long haul tariff will thus ruin one of our leading industries. During the last season train after train of fruits were shipped East. This cannot now be done. It is urged that the wool industry will be aided by the law; this is impossible; the Canadian Pacific railway can and will deliver the products of Eastern manufacturers on our shores at prices we cannot compete with. The long haul law is premature and unwise, and cannot possibly stand. Its result will be to favor a foreign railway at the expense of our own, which is obviously unjust. A trial will convince the Commission of the fallacy of their action.

How's Your Liver?

Is the Oriental salutation, knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. Simmons Liver Regulator has been the means of restoring more people to health and happiness by giving them a healthy Liver than any agency known on earth. It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy.

SATURDAY, APRIL 30.....1887.

DIED.

PARKER—At Independence, April 26th, 1887, Abraham Parker, a native of Maine, aged 65 years 16 months and 17 days.

Mr. Parker was one of the Pioneers of Inyo county, coming to Bend City in 1863. Since the founding of Independence he has been identified with its interests, accumulating considerable property. His loss will be deeply felt in the community, of which he was a respected citizen. He was buried under the auspices of the Odd Fellows fraternity on Wednesday afternoon.

John Anton was in town a couple of days this week.

Mrs. G. H. Hardy is visiting friends in Independence.

J. G. Birchim, of Round Valley, was in town this week.

Mr. James Moffat and wife attended the ball last Tuesday night.

W. K. Miller and wife, of Lone Pine, were in town on Wednesday.

Mr. Hawley returned to Darwin this week, accompanied by his wife and children.

There is a plentiful supply of snow on the mountains and a good water season is assured.

There is a constant demand for green vegetables of all kinds up along the line of the C. & C.

Peter Olsen, the Napa murderer, is still at large, though strenuous efforts are being made to apprehend him.

Quite a number of the young folks of Big Pine, attended the dance at Independence on Tuesday evening.

The unusual amount of the sickness in in the valley lately is generally attributed to the bright and open winter.

Grain crops are very promising. Alfalfa has a good start and a successful year for the farmers may be predicted.

The base ball season is now fairly inaugurated, with the Greenhood & Morans the predicted winners for the year.

Mrs. A. W. Eibeshutz returned home from San Francisco on Wednesday, where she had been for three weeks past.

The trial of Aaron Hood which was to have taken place yesterday was postponed on account of sickness of defendant.

The first shipment was made from the Mt. Diablo mill, at Soda Springs on Tuesday. It consisted of six bars of bullion.

The late rains have proved very valuable to the farmers west of the mountains. Coming just as they did a good grain crop is now assured.

T. B. Scovil, Evangelist, will speak at the school-house, Camp Independence, Sunday, May 1st, at 1 o'clock P. M., and at Independence, same night at 7:30 o'clock.

The Hotel of J. J. Nicholson, at Belleville, has been closed for a time, there not being sufficient business to warrant keeping it open. Johnny was a first-class landlord.

The Old Fellows Ball to have been given on Tuesday, has been indefinitely postponed because of the death of Abraham Parker, who was long an esteemed member of the order.

The town of Gridley and vicinity is having a boom. An extra eight page edition of the Record-Union contains an interesting article on the possibilities and future prospects of this region.

The Executive Committee for the Fourth of July celebration will hold a meeting at the office of Dr. Blair this (Saturday) evening and perfect all arrangements. Programme will appear next week.

A very mysterious murder was perpetrated in Sacramento on Thursday night of last week. J. F. Klampf, a Folsom merchant, was shot in the back and instantly killed. There is no clue to the assassin.

There is a vast amount of travel over the Central Pacific at present. The daily overland from the west is run over the hill in two sections, which, when joined at Truckee, form a train of great length. These are mostly Eastern tourists returning to their homes.

Martin Brazzanovich will give a picnic at Soda Springs on Sunday next. He has been making a number of improvements at that place including the erection of four new cottages. There is a daily ore train to the mill, which is running steadily, affording employment to quite a number of men. Soda is a lively camp.

A citizens' ball was held at Mairs' Hall on Tuesday evening, which was well attended. The music and other arrangements were all that could have been desired and the supper, first-class. Nothing was spared by the management to make the occasion a success, and their efforts were rewarded by the pleasure afforded those who attended.

The fastest time ever made on the railroad between Sacramento and San Francisco was made Monday morning, April 18th, by locomotives Nos. 96 and 154, drawing the second section, composed of nineteen cars of baggage of National Opera Company's train. Between Davisville and Suisun twenty-seven miles were made in twenty-seven minutes. Billings and Clark were the engineers.

Nothing is of so much importance to the future prosperity of Inyo county as irrigation. Now that the necessary steps are taken for the formation of an irrigation district, every one, whether owning lands within the district or not, should work earnestly for the success of the project. Nothing ever done for the county would bring such extensive and enduring prosperity as this undertaking.

LADIES will find relief from their Costiveness, Swimming in the Head, Colic, Sour Stomach, Headache, Kidney troubles, etc., by taking a dose of Simmons Liver Regulator after dinner or supper, so as to move the bowels once a day. Mothers will have better health and the babies will grow more robust by using the Regulator. If an infant shows signs of Colic, nothing like a few drops in water for relief. The Genuine has the red Z on front of Wrapper.

The Outlook.

There is a prevailing opinion among those who have given the matter any consideration that an era of prosperity is now fairly inaugurated in Owens Valley. Government land is being rapidly located by men of means, who can and will make valuable improvements. Large irrigating ditches are being constructed that will make a vast acreage productive. Large orchards are being set out, which, as our valley is unexcelled for fruit growing, will in time become very valuable. Not only are our own people becoming imbued with the idea of progress but the outside world is awakening to the possibilities of Owens valley. A Sacramento land owner and real estate dealer, a man who is in a position to form accurate estimates of land values throughout the State, is of the opinion that land will relatively increase in value here far more rapidly than in any portion of the State. A great tide of immigration is rolling toward this coast; villages spring up like magic; the Los Angeles region is already over populated; the large grain ranches of the Sacramento valley are being divided into small holdings for orchards and vineyards; land that a short time ago was selling for $25 an acre is now worth from $75 to $100. Here government land can be had for $1 25 an acre. Land that for orchard and vineyard purposes is unrivalled. But this will not be for long. Until recently ours was an unknown land, a terra incognita. A land pictured to the lower country people like the Europa of the ancients, teeming with wild beasts and wilder men. All this is now changed; their representatives have been here to spy out the land, and report it the best poor man's country in the world. A land literally flowing with milk and honey. A land where wine will flow as water and the most luscious fruits can be had for the picking. Men who have small sums to invest will come here to do so, and make their homes; men of wealth will come for speculative purposes, knowing that there is no such field on the Coast to-day. There is one thing needed; a railroad communication from Los Angeles to turn the stream of immigration from that already flooded country in our direction and present indications point so strongly in this direction that we may confidently expect it soon.

A Complete Success.

The Lyon County Times of the 23d inst. says: The first retort, since the introduction of the electric system into the Douglas mill, was gotten out yesterday. The result more than verifies the expectations of the most sanguine. The bullion production has been about doubled. The fineness of the bullion has been increased, reducing the expense of retorting and refining. The quicksilver return shows that at least 85 per cent. of the usual loss has been recovered. Success has now been established beyond the possibility of a doubt. It has also been demonstrated that the stock of quicksilver necessary to carry on the mill may be reduced about one-third. It has also been demonstrated that the amount of copper solution may be materially decreased. Settler samples that formerly assayed as high as $3 17 per ton, have been reduced to $1 31 per ton, with prospects of still farther reduction. The quicksilver return can not be given accurately, but it is known that it will not fall below the 85 per cent. mentioned, and may go much higher.

THE TANTIVY'S FIRST TRIP.

An Irreverent Joker Raises the Laugh on a New York Coaching Party.

The coaching season was opened the other day, when the red-bodied coach Tantivy was driven by Frederic Bronson, from the Hotel Brunswick to the Country club in Pelham. At 3:45 the party left the club house for the return trip, which was made without particular incident until the drag had passed through Central park and started down Fifth avenue. Then the Tantivy's glory departed. The guard blew one merry blast and fell back on his perch horrified. J. R. Roosevelt, who was proudly handling the lines blushed a little as he heard the shouts of laughter which took the place of the plaudits which should have greeted the party. The ladies laughed irreverently. So did some of their escorts. Every one on the avenue joined in the laughter, which made the finish of the Tantivy's first trip rather farcical. Edward G. Gilmore, the manager of Niblo's garden and a notorious practical joker, was at the bottom of the scheme which made Fifth avenue roar, and led all the dudes who had gathered at the Brunswick to look upon him as little short of sacrilegious.

Trotting behind the swell Tantivy on its course down the avenue were two mules—mules with extraordinary ears; mules closely clipped and with shining coats; mules meek and lowly, but arrayed in heavily-plated harness, and hitched in the most improved four-in-hand fashion to a most thoroughly English break. "Ned" Gilmore held the lines, and flourished a most gorgeously decorated coachman's whip. Two colored grooms had seats of honor behind him, and Gilmore had as his only passenger a Chicago man, who had picked up the team of mules out in Pennsylvania for a contractor, who is to use them as a fancy team at his country residence this summer. Gilmore looked proud as he drove, and the single passenger looked as if he would rather be on the sidewalk. Being a party to such a practical joke didn't appear to be wholly to his taste.

Gilmore paid no attention to the bystanders, but drove on, modesty accepting the applause bestowed. He seemed at home in his triumphal procession and perfectly happy. The Tantivy drove up to the Brunswick at precisely 5:30. Two grooms sprang out and led the horses in front of the main entrance. An instant later four mules halted in the rear, with their colored grooms at their heads. The Anglomaniacs wondered. The American contingent enjoyed the burlesque immensely. The coaching party sought the seclusion of the Brunswick parlors as quick as they could gracefully do so. So did Gilmore and his friends, but the parlor they found had a long bar and a free lunch in it.

"The only thing I regret about my first coaching trip this season," explained Gilmore as he wiped his lips, "is that it didn't take place last week. If the season had only opened then I could have had a party of chorus girls as passengers, and then I could have knocked out anything on the avenue for style.—New York Times.

PETITION FOR AN IRRIGATION DISTRICT

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent, that they and each of them are freeholders owning land within the boundaries hereinafter fully described and set forth.

That the lands within the said boundaries are the public of one mode of irrigation from a common source, to-wit, the Owens River and its tributaries; and by the same system of works.

That your petitioners are desirous of organizing an Irrigation District under the provisions of an act of the General Assembly of the State of California, entitled, "An Act to provide for the organization and government of irrigation districts, and to provide for the acquisition of water and other property, and for the distribution of water thereby for irrigation purposes," approved March 7, 1887, for the purposes herein before stated, and in said Act provided for.

That the lands proposed to be included in said Irrigation District are situated in the County of Inyo, State of California, and the said boundaries within which said proposed district is made, are fully described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at the quarter section corner on the line between sections two and eleven in township No. eleven, south, of range No. thirty-four, east, M. D. M; thence south following the line in the centre of sections Nos. eleven, fourteen, twenty-three and twenty-six, four miles; thence west twenty chains; thence south forty chains; thence west twenty chains; thence south forty chains to township line between townships eleven and twelve, south; thence south following the section line between sections two and three and ten and eleven, one hundred and twenty and ten hundredths chains to quarter corner between sections Nos. ten and eleven, in township No. twelve, south, of range No. thirty four, east; thence west twenty chains; thence south one hundred and forty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south sixty chains to corner common to sections twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty six and twenty-seven; thence east twenty chains; thence south forty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south one mile to the centre of section No. thirty-five; thence east twenty chains; thence south twenty chains; thence east forty chains; thence south twenty chains to township line between townships Nos twelve and thirteen, south, of range No. thirty-four and thirty-five, east; thence south eighteen and ten hundredths chain; thence east twenty chains; thence south twenty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south sixty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south twenty chains; thence east forty chains; thence south twenty chains to section line between sections Nos. sixteen and twenty-one; thence east twenty chains to corner common to sections Nos fifteen, sixteen, twenty-one and twenty two, in township No. thirteen, south, of range No. thirty-five, east; thence south forty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south two hundred and twenty and forty hundredths chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south twenty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south twenty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south sixty chains; thence east twenty chains; thence south eighty chains; thence east twenty chains to centre of section No. fourteen, in township No. fourteen, south, of range No. thirty-five, east, M. MARVELOUS CHANGES.

What the Future Will be to those who Refuse to Believe.

Is this country unconsciously undergoing a wonderful change, is the change to take place before we are aware of the fact, and when it has taken place will we wonder why we did not see it before it was too late?

Those that see the change early avail themselves early, and thereby receive benefit.

The shrewd iron man sees the iron interest transferred from Pittsburg and Pennsylvania to Birmingham, Alabama, and in his far-sightedness sees the furnaces in Pennsylvania torn down and deserted for this new and prolific field. It is claimed by the iron men of Alabama that the low price at which iron can be produced there will revolutionize the iron interests of the world.

We have seen the grain-growing centers of this country shifted to the West. We have seen the pork-packing industry flit from Cincinnati to Chicago, and from thence to Kansas City and Omaha. Southern cotton mills undersell New England and American markets, and challenge the world.

We have seen and are seeing all this take place before our eyes, and know that other changes are taking place equally as prominent, and we wonder as we behold them. Ten years ago the insurance companies only required an analysis of the fluids when they were taking insurance for very large amounts. To-day no first-class company will insure any amount unless they have a rigid analysis of the fluids passed, and if any traces of certain disorders are apparent, the application is rejected. In their reports they show that the death of sixty of every 100 people in this country, is due either directly or indirectly to such disorders. The Brompton Hospital for Consumptives, London, England, reports that sixty of every 100 victims of consumption also have serious disorders of the kidneys.

Among scientists for the treatment of this dread malady the question is being discussed:

"Is not this disorder the real cause of consumption?"

Ten years ago the microscope was something seldom found in a physician's office; now every physician of standing has one and seldom visits his patients without calling for a sample of fluids for examination.

Why is all this? Is it possible that we of the present generation are to die of diseases caused by kindey disorders? or shall we master the cause by Warner's safe cure, the only recognized specific, and thus remove the effects? It is established beyond a doubt that a very large percentage of deaths in this country are traceable to diseased kidneys. For years the proprietors of Warner's safe cure have been insisting that there is no sound health when the kidneys are diseased, and they enthusiastically press their specific for this terrible disorder upon public attention. We are continually hearing its praises sounded.

Cannot the propietors of this great remedy, who have been warning us of the danger, tell us how to avoid a disease that at first is so unimportant, and is so fatal in its termination? Are we to hope against hope, and wait without our reward?

The most significent of all changes, however, that we of to-day can note is this radical change of view to which the public has been educated: It was formerly thought that the kidneys were of very small importance; to-day, we believe, it is generally admitted that there can be no such thing as sound health in any organ if they are in the least degree deranged.

SUDDEN RICHES.

How a Clothes Peddler Brought Wealth to a Capitalist.

Gabriel Karsky rang the bell. His business was that of a second-hand clothes-dealer and the bell was that of No. 10 Liberty street, where David Cohen, a capitalist, resided. Karsky kept a little stuffy shop at 335 Sixth street and often in the pursuit of his calling he took a turn in the fresh air and gathered up old garments to be furnished up as new. Gabriel had often rang the bell at No. 10 Liberty street and when he did so this rainy afternoon, about a month ago and Mrs. Cohen came to the door she said, pleasantly, "Nothing to sell to-day, Gabriel."

"I have though" said Karsky, drawing a crumpled paper from his oocket, "I've got a Louisiana lottery ticke' here and that is a coupon of ticket 73,987 and I want to sell it." Mrs. Cohen, however, would have nothing to do with the coupon, Karsky insisted and the argument went on until Mr. Cohen impatiently shouted from the sitting-room to take the coupon, give the man a dollar and let him go. The ticket and Mrs. Cohen's dollar changed places and Gabriel pocketing the piece went on his way in the quiet contentment of small profits.

On the 16th of February the list of prizes was published in the Chronicle, and Mrs. Cohen, looking over it with mild curiosity, saw with amazement that ticket No. 73,987 had drawn the first capital prize, and that her coupon was worth $15,000. She collected the money through Wells, Fargo & Co's bank, and, remembering the circumstances of her purchase, sent Karsky $100.

This was not the only sudden fortune that came to San Francisco from New Orleans last month. Another tenth of the first capital prize was drawn here; $2,000 came in a lump to an old woman who held a coupon of ticket No. 14,105, and two young men with Murphy, Grant & Co. have become $5,000 richer by holding a coupon of ticket 45,151, which drew the second capital prize.—San Francisco (Cal.) Chronicle, March 3.

How Long He Would Wait.

"How long would you be willing to wait for me?" she asked, in tones so low he could scarcely catch the words.

And then she went on: "You know, George," she said: "that father has recently invested in a western silver mine, and he is going there at once, and I cannot leave mother alone. So I ask you again, George, how long would you be willing to wait for me?"

"Wait for you, my darling," repeated George with deep emotion, for his was no fleeting love, dear readers; "I will wait for you until we learn how the silver mine pans out."—Puck.

FOODS AND MILK.

Synopsis of Interesting Experiments Recently Made in Germany.

Interesting experiments have been made in Germany by Herr Neuhaus upon the effects of succulent and dry foods upon the quality of the milk. It is well known that cows fed on green forage give an abundant quantity of milk, and the pasturage being rich, the milk is of high quality. It was wished to ascertain if cows suffered in the production of milk, as to quality, by the different class of food which city cow-keepers were compeled to use.

Two chemists were employed by Herr Neuhaus, and their results are in each case the same. Supposing that a cow requires 1.30 per cent. of her weight of dry material, but, in addition, 4.30 per cent. of her weight of water, Herr Neuhaus believes that neither forage grass from irrigated meadows, or grains, both of which contain a large quantity of water, would have a bad influence upon the milk. In the first analysis made of milk from cows fed upon green forage cut from irrigated meadows, to which some lucerne was added, the results were: Fatty matters, 2.08 per cent., and dry matters, 12 per cent. Three analyses made of milk obtained from cows fed exclusively upon forage grass obtained from irrigated meadows gave the following results:

Fatty Matters.	Dry Matters.
3.50	12
3.95	12
3.80	13.15

It is well known that cows which are fed in the stall give milk which is richer in the evening than in the morning, and it was found to be the same in analyses of milk produced from forage-fed cows, as follows:

	Fatty Matters.	Dry Matters.
Milk of the Morning	2.08	11
" Midday	3	12
" Evening	3	12.5

Herr Neuhaus believes that when grains are fed rationally they are not hurtful to the cattle; but he makes a most important point when he states that it is necessary to heat them from 120 to 140 degrees in order to kill the dangerous organisms which they contain and to prevent acidulation. In how many cases in this country do dairymen use grains which are absolutely sour, and use them too every day? The danger of grain feeding is not so much in the food itself as in the condition in which it is given. The analyses of milk produced from a ration composed of grains, irrigated forage grass, and barley straw, was: Fatty matters, 3.56; dry matters, 12.05. The German writer also gives details with regard to the cream yield, and explains the differences which in some instances arise by reason of the variety of kinds and sizes of creamometers which are in use among dairymen. A proper cream tube or glass should be an inch and a half in diameter, the narrow tubes so commonly used being practically useless. At the same time it may be observed that the cream test is of no decisive value as an indication of the value of the milk.

Cream is composed of fat globules and milk, the milk being sometimes much larger in proportion than at others, and in some cases, where the size of the cream globules varies, as it does in different cows and in different races, these globules do not rise to their full extent, and consequently the cream does not indicate as it ought to do. It has long been conclusively shown that although the cream test is, roughly speaking, a near enough guide for ordinary consumers of milk, buying in small quantities, it is not a sufficient test—indeed, quite the reverse, being most misleading as an indication of the food and fat value of the milk.

It is stated that the difficulty is found in Berlin, as in London, in milk which has been transported to a distance, for the cream rises to the surface before it is delivered, and it is with difficulty again amalgamated, and in the same way it may be remarked that where dairymen send out milk in large cans and deliver it from a tap at the bottom there is a liability to hand customers a sample which is poor in consequence of the rising of the cream to the surface.

To remedy this defect a German has invented a tube which enables a retailer to deliver milk from this tap at the bottom of his can which is of proper quality so far as regards the milk which the can contains. The great object in delivering from the bottom of the can is to enable the milk retailer to lock his can, and so prevent the delivery man extracting any or adding water.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

A Reliable Fertilizer.

Unbleached wood ashes are always a good fertilizer. There is no question about that. But because they do not, in some instances, produce good crops, should farmers condemn them? Evidently not. Bone used alone may in many cases produce a paying increase in yield; in others the efficacy may not be appreciable. Does this prove any thing against bone as a fertilizer? Suppose we use both bone and ashes. In the experiments where neither have proved helpful both of them may prove of high value. When both fail we should not condemn ashes and bone as valueless. Let us add nitrogen in some form. Then we have the esential parts of farm manure. If this combination fails to increase the crops, it will be because the land is already rich, or because there is too little rainfal to render them available.—St. Louis Republican.

Value of a Good Name.

"I makee lailload. I keepee wash house allee same. I no care."

"What's your name?"

"My name Patlick O'Laffaty!"

"Patrick O'Rafferty! Now, that is stealing a name."

"Welly goot name!"

"Oh, come, Hop Key, or whatever your name is, what did you give me an Irish name for?"

"If I no hab Patlick O'Laffaty faw my name, I no ketchee contlact! You see?"—Youths' Companion.

CHILDREN OF THE APACHES.

A prominent feature of any Apache village are the children, who are unkept little savages, but are much handsomer in childhood than in mature life. The care of the male children devolves upon the man, who carefully educates them to emulation and practice in deeds of blood, including the art of scientific torturing. So well are these lessons taught that the Apache boy, at an early age, is ambitious and fitted to go on the warpath. Some of the most daring deeds in Apache warfare have been performed by boys who were emulous to earn their title to manhood,

The girl is taught the rude domestic arts and lessons of labor, but her education in barbarity is not a whit less thorough than that of the boy. The fate of the captive among the Apaches has always been most lamentable, but the greatest cruelty both to men and women have been perpetrated by the Apache females. A captive woman, made compulsorily the wife or slave of an Apache warrior, is usually, after the first cruelties of the attending capture, treated by him as well as other women in the tribe, but, in his absence, the captive will be often grievously beaten by the other wives.

The education of the Apache girl begins with her care of the younger children. She learns to carry water and to go forth to hunt roots, wild fruits and berries, worms and reptiles, and whatever else goes to make up the Apache cuisine. She is taught to prepare for eating the game or domestic animals used for food brought in by the warriors from their excursions. Much of this animal food being common property, she learns to make a vigorous fight to secure for her own household the entrails, which are the greatest luxury to the Apache. She subsists largely upon such odds and ends as she can get by stealth or after others have been satisfied, as the special household care is the providing for the wants of the warriors and boys. Under such an education she grows up strong, tough and fleet footed, accustomed to every effort of endurance, privation and hardship of Indian life.—Sunshine.

Houses in Rio Janeiro.

Is Rio built of wood, or brick, or of marble? Neither, it is, however, massively built. The walls of the buildings are concrete, formed of split stone, mortar, and an occasional layer of brick, are usually two feet thick, and in some of the older buildings are even thicker. The color of the walls is frequently white, sometimes a brilliant blue, olive green, or a light red. The roofs, four sided, of the hip style, are all covered with thick, red, oval tiles, and, there being no chimneys, their aspect is dull. To relieve this, the more genteel houses have either a balustrade or stuccoed wall around the roofs, with statues, vases or other figures on the corners. The stories and windows are high. Balconies are common, with smooth granite bottoms, sculptured underneath, being composed of large blocks extending through the thickness of the wall, and lending strength as well as ornament to the edifice.

The windows in the modern buildings open door fashion, and are well adapted to the climate. They are very securely fastened at top and bottom by simply the turn of the handle of an iron bolt. Windows in the lower stories have strong wooden folding shutters inside. In chamber windows the glass part opens inward on hinges, with blinds opening outward. The trimmings, such as window caps, door and window facings, are of smooth granite—the handsome black and white granite so abundant at Rio—often perfectly arched, and lend an aspect of durability as well as of ornament to the building. The foundation walls to the height of two feet or more are of granite. In some of the stuccoed buildings almost too much expense seems to have been devoted to outside show. Many houses are in imitation of reddish marble, and very handsome. Some of the inside shutters, of black walnut, or or those painted white, with gilt borders, show to advantage through windows of plate glass. There is not much display of curtains. The front sides of some of the older buildings are wholly or partly covered with flat porcelain tiles, generally of blue color, also like what may be seen in Lisbon.—Andrews' Brazil.

How We Taste.

Strictly speaking, with the tip of the tongue, one can't really taste at all. If you put a small drop of honey or oil of bitter almonds on that part of the mouth, you will find, no doubt to your surprise, that it produces no effect of any sort; you only taste it when it begins slowly to diffuse itself, and reaches the true tasting region in the middle distance. But if you put a little cayenne or mustard on the same part you will find that it bites you immediately—the experiment should be tried sparingly—while if you put it lower down in the mouth you will swallow it almost without noticing the pungency of the stimulant. The reason is that the tip of the tongue is supplied only with the nerves, which are really nerves of touch, not nerves of taste proper; they belong to a totally different main branch, and they go to a different center in the brain, together with the very similar threads which supply the nerve of smell for mustard and pepper. That is why the smell and taste of these pungent substances are so much alike as everybody must have noticed, a good sniff at a mustard pot producing almost the same irritating effects as an incautious mouthful.—Journal of Commerce.

How We Observe Traditions.

How did it happen that Socrates, the highest and noblest of them all, could so far countenance the popular religious belief as to ask his disciples to offer the customary sacrifice of two cocks to Æsculapius only a little while before his death? How does it happen that world wide traditions become so enrooted into the very blood and fiber that they became second nature to them. It is the kind of education people receive. People are afraid to think and be free. The great masses of the people are not educated to think for themselves. They are so busy about things in this world that they must take the facts from somebody, and they take counsel and go with the majority.—Rev. Minot J. Savage.

Going to School in Mexico.

A gentleman of an investigating turn of mind has taken the trouble to ascertain accurately how many days the children of Mexico lost from school during 1886. Here is the result: Fifty-two Sundays, twenty-six Saturdays, four national feast days, forty-five days of vacation and fifty Catholic holidays, making a total of 177 days, and having only 188 school days. When we take into consideration the fact that the most punctual child does not take advantage of every school day, we arrive at the conclusion that the children of this city do not attend school half of their time.—Two Republics (City of Mexico).

AT THE END OF THE CHUTE.

The maid had on a blanket suit;
The beau had on one, too,
As they adown the slippery chute
On their toboggan flew.

"Oh, hold me tight!" the maiden cried,
A-gasping for her breath.
"I am!" the frightened youth replied,
A-hanging on like death.

Like railway trains, like lightning hot,
Like meteors from the sky,
Like bullets from a rifle shot
Did they in terror fly.

The shrieks that maiden gave with might
Were floating far behind
As now, invisible to sight,
Down, down they went it blind.

The old toboggan humped and bumped
Along the icy glare,
Then, of a sudden, up it jumped
And slid right on the air.

On air alone it had to scud
Till, with a mighty throe
And with a soft and sickening thud,
It plunged four feet in snow.

And left four feet stuck out beside
That brought, when pulled right smart,
Two bags of snow which vainly tried
To tell themselves apart.
—H. C. Dodge in Puck.

The Passenger Who Bought a Coat.

A passenger from Springfield was telling of his purchase of an overcoat from a Hebrew merchant on South Clark street. The price was $30.

"If dot goat doan't suit you, pring it pack right avay an' ve'll gif you your monish back, subject to all fluctuations in the market. If de goat market goes up, you gets more monish as you paid vor him; if de goat market goes down, you lose de difference only, my dear, pesides havin' de use of de goat. Dot's de vay all peesiness vas done in Chicago, my vriend."

On these terms the passenger from Springfield paid over his $30 and took the coat. Next day, having examined the garment more thoroughly, he concluded that he didn't want it, and so took it back.

"Vot! Dot goat not suit you?" exclaimed the merchant. "Vell, ve take him back. Isaac, put dot goat on the sheliuf, an' gif de shendleman six tollars."

"But I paid you $30 for the coat, and want my money back."

"So, my friend, but goats haf gone down last night. I guess it vos de war news from Europe. Goats are down, an' we haf marked our whole stock at gost. Isaac, six dollars for the shendlemans. You only lose the difference, my dear, an' you had de goat all night. Dot's de way peesiness vas done in Chicago."—Chicago Herald.

Hard Work to Wind Up a Prayer.

Representative W. W. Rice, of Massachusetts, being called upon for a few feeble remarks at the end of a dinner last week, said that the presiding genius reminded him of a Methodist convert down in Maine. He had been anything but a praying man, yet when he had once joined the church the brethren thought he ought to be praying all the time. He was very slow to set about it. In fact, he positively refused in much fear and trembling. But after awhile, by dint of assiduity and dexterous tact, his near neighbor and close friend got him up in a prayer meeting one night. Once up he prayed as though he could not stop. He prayed for the universe, the world, America, the United States, the state of Maine and the county of Aroostook, not forgetting the good people of Bangor. He prayed for the church—universal, militant and triumphant, general and particular, abroad and at home. He prayed for everybody in his own congregation, present or absent, collectively and individually; he began to repeat himself. At last he turned to his friend and said in a loud whisper: "It's easy enough to pray, but it's mighty hard to peter it out right."

The Quality of Mercy.

The little brindle mule in the nigh lead slipped on the icy pavement, and Mr. Bergh's best man was on the spot. "Take that mule and have him sharpened before you drive him another foot." "He is sharpened," said the driver, "rougher than a file. Look at them hind shoes—corks on 'em that 'ud wedge a hole through an ice house." The officer lifted a hoof to see, and straightway looked over the top of a four story building. Buzzingly ran the word through the telephone: "One of your men has been nearly killed by a mule." Tenderly back came the muffled order: "See if the mule is hurt, and if it is arrest the man."—Burdette.

THE DECEITFULNESS OF ALCOHOL

Millions of people, when they feel a little out of sorts, take some alcoholic drink or other, either as a beverage or as medicine. Almost at once they think they feel better. As soon as the stimulus loses its power they feel badly again, and so they again resort to the alcoholic dose because, as they thought it made them better when they first took it, it may make them better again. Doctors deceive themselves and their patients by prescribing alcoholic doses. The patients generally like it, too, and so the doctors continue on prescribing for them what they like. Few are cured and many are made tipplers to their permanent disadvantage.

Alcohol is at best nothing but a stimulant. That is not what chronic nervous sufferers want. They want permanent strength to throw off and resist disease. They want a real vitalizer; and such a vitalizer is found in Compound Oxygen. The merits of this vitalizer have for many years been abundantly tested. There is no secret about it. The history of the army of the relieved is fully on record so that all may read it. It is well worth reading, either by sick people or well. To obtain it write to Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa. It will be sent to any address free of charge.

Orders for the Compound Oxygen Home Treatment will be filled by H. A. Mathews, 615 Powell Street, San Francisco.

The songs of the woodbirds are sweet,
The wild notes, and those that are steady;
But the sweetest sound that a man doth greet,
Is, "Hubby, your dinner is ready."

A GENIAL RESTORATIVE.

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters are emphatically a genial restorative. The changes which this great botanic remedy produces in the disorded organization are always agreeably, though surely progressive, never abrupt, and violent. On this account it is admirably adapted to persons of delicate constitution and weak nerves to whom the powerful mineral drugs are positively injurious. That it initiates those processes which result in the re-establishment of healthful vigor is conspicuously shown in cases where it is taken to overcome that fruitful cause of debility, indigestion, coupled, as it usually is, with biliousness and constipation. Thorough digestion, regular evacuation and abundant secretion, are results which promptly and invariably attend its systematic use. It is, besides, the best protective against malaria, and a first rate diuretic.

"The car stove must go." So cry the papers. They are all wrong. What is wanted is to have the car stove left behind and let the car go without it.

"He who is false to present duty," says Henry Ward Beecher, "breaks a thread in the loom, and will find the flaw when he may have forgotten its cause." A case in point occurs to us. Mr. Wm. Ryder, of 87 Jefferson street, Buffalo, N. Y., recently told a reporter that, "I had a large abscess on each leg, that kept continually discharging for twenty years. Nothing did me any good except Dr. Pierce's 'Golden Medical Discovery.' It cured me." Here is a volume expressed in a few words. Mr. Ryder's experience is entitled to our readers' careful consideration.—The Sun.

PLEURISY CURED.

KINGSTON, ONTARIO, December 7, 1885.

Six years ago I caught a severe cold standing in an ice house with my coat off. I felt myself getting chilly and went to the house, where I shook for half an hour and then had high fever and terrible pain in my side and through my lungs. I put an ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER on my back and one on the front of my chest, and in a short time the pain decreased and I fell asleep, and did not wake until the next morning, when I was again quite as well as ever. In telling my doctor about it, he said I had been attacked with pleurisy and, possibly, pneumonia.

Suffering Womanhood.

Too much effort cannot be made to bring to the attention of suffering womanhood the great value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a remedy for the diseases of women. Such an one is the wife of General Barringer of Winston, N. C., and we quote from the General's letter as follows: "Dear Mrs. Pinkham: Please allow me to add my testimony to the most excellent medicinal qualities of your Vegetable Compound. Mrs. Barringer was treated for several years for what the physician called Leucorrhœa and Prolapsus Uteri combined. I sent her to Richmond, Va., where she remained for six months under the treatment of an eminent Physician without any permanent benefit. She was induced to try your medicine and after a reasonable time commenced to improve and is now able to attend to her business and considers herself fully relieved." [General Barringer is the proprietor of the American Hotel, Winston, N. C., and is widely known.]

GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY

from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Rose Rash, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-Joint Disease, White Swellings, Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE." Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, and vital strength, will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. PIERCE thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have sallow color of skin, or yellowish-brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills, alternating with hot flushes, low spirits and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and coated tongue, you are suffering from Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and Torpid Liver, or "Biliousness." In many cases only part of these symptoms are experienced. As a remedy for all such cases, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is unsurpassed.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy. SOLD BY DRUGGISTS, at $1.00, or SIX BOTTLES for $5.00.

BURMAH'S PEOPLES.

Interesting Data Concerning their Origin, Habits and Customs.

Mr. J. A. Bryce gives the proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society an interesting account of the country and peoples of Burmah. The various peoples who inhabit the last addition to the British Empire appear to be all of Mongolian affinities, but they differ from each other as widely as do the races of Indo-European stock. Out of the total population, which may be placed at seven millions and a quarter, the true Burmese are about one-half, the rest belonging to the races known as Karens, Kakhyens, Khyens, Shans and Talaing. The whole of these races have, in common with the remainder of the peoples who are not dominant in in Indo-China, descended at various periods either from China or from Tibet, and may be considered for the most part as more or less Sinicised aboriginal peoples who have fled southward to escape the political power of China. No two authorities seem to agree respecting the relative dates at which all these various peoples entered the peninsula. The Talaing was certainly in possession of Pegu and Arracan before the Burman, and the Talaing race still forms the bulk of the population in the delta of the Irrawadi and the Sittang. The Talaing is usually considered to be related to the Kolarian of Hindustan. In person he is smaller, plumper, fairer and less hard-featured than his Burmese conquerors.

Less seems to be known about the Karens than the Talaing, but Lacouperie believes that thay were dominant in Indo-China previous to the irruption of the various races of Shans. Mr. Bryce believes that in Burmah they post-date the Tibetans. There are at the present time two very different races within Burmese territory who bear the name of Karens. One of these is the Karennees or Red Karens, so-called from the color of their breeches—a tribe of untamable head-hunters, owning allegiance to no one; and the white Karens, a quiet and inoffensive race inhabiting some districts of Lower Burmah, especially the mountains of Tenasserim.

The Burmese proper are among the oldest people of the country. Overwhelmed by the Shans they after awhile arose again, and imposed their yoke upon their former masters. As a race they have shown great vitality; while as individuals, though habitually indolent, they are capable of great displays of energy when sufficiently aroused. The Burman is the Parisian of Asia. None can excel him in all the graces of politeness. The good-humored, hard-working but less courteous Shan appears to him a savage. In stature the Burmese are inferior to the Shan, though taller than the Talaing. The great Shan race, though less numerous in Burmah than the Burmese themselves, is now preponderant in the peninsula. The Siamese are Shan, as are the peoples to the north of them, whether paying tribute to China, Burmah, Annam or Siam. Some defect in the Shan character seems to prevent their agglomeration into large masses, and thus it has come to pass that most of their Princes are tributary, though it can not be disputed that the northern Shans of Burmah and the Laos States are the most energetic peoples of the peninsula.

The Kakhyens are a rude people, when compared with the Shans or the Burmese. They inhabit the hilly districts of Assam and northwestern Burmah, and have recently, owing to the weakness of the Burmese power, encroached toward the south. In Assam they are known as Singphos. The Khyens are settled in the mountains between Burmah and Bengal. The Burmese proper are chiefly settled in the upper part of the Irrawadi delta, in a narrow belt on each side of the Irrawadi in Upper Burmah, the upper valley of the Sittang, and the Moo valley, between the Irrawadi and its tributary, the Kyendwin.

The total area of Burmah is about 230,000 square miles, and is thus nearly equal to the State of Texas. The greater part of this area is uncultivated mountain and forest, and Mr. Bryce states that not above one-seventh even of Lower Burmah is cultivated. The lower part of the combined deltas of the Irrawadi and the Sittang receive one hundred inches of rain annually, but this is diminished one-half at the apex of the delta, and the plain of the Upper Irrawadi is deficient in rainfall, and depends for its water supply upon the river.—N. Y. Independent.

How the Japs Measure Time.

A party of Americans, describing a shopping tour while recently in Japan, refer among other things to the clocks shown them. Some were constructed on American models, while others were fashioned upon a principle peculiarly Japanese, and supposed to be more convenient for the registration of their singular time. The twenty-four hours are divided in Japan into twelve periods of time, six of which are appropriated to darkness and six to the light. The day being calculated from sunrise to sunset, there is a necessary variation in the length of the six day and six night hours, the latter being the longest in winter, the former in summer. The clocks are altered periodically to suit the seasons of the year.—Jewelers' Weekly.

—Out West the people would say "he was flat on his back." The cultured Eastern press writes it: "He reposed in a position of dorsal recumbency."

—"Did you have all your lessons at school to-day, little boy?" "Yes, sir; an' more too." "More than all your lessons?" "Yes, sir—a lickin'!"

A Doctor's Experience With South American Men and Animals.

There is a big room or two up at Columbia College, in which are spread abroad more wonders than were ever dreamt of in Horatio's philosophy. Birds, beasts, fishes, plants of strange nature. Indian relics and all manner of South American wonders are here, the prizes captured in a two years' struggle with danger and suffering by an American scientific investigator. The owner of these treasures is Dr. Henry H. Rosby, of Detroit, who, January 10, 1885, left New York for a tour through Chili and Bolivia in the hope of discovering amid the fauna and flora of the Andes and the Amazon some valuable additions to the medicinal riches of the American pharmacopœia.

Dr. Rosby's adventures were many and interesting. He met the sorocho in its native lair, did battle with the Caripuna Indians and the man-eating fish and alligators of the Beni river, broiled in the stenches of La Paz, the filthiest city this side of Constantinople, took his daily doses of quinine like a little man, and saw the place where five million cinchona trees are growing, the source from which all the calisaya cocktails of the future must come. From all this he came out much the worse for wear, but still full of enthusiasm, and confident that out of the three hundred native drugs he had examined, two or three would prove superior to the similar remedies now known to the medical profession.

Dr. Rosby intended to land at Mallendo and go direct to Bolivia, but the Peruvian war prevented. General Caceras was making things lively for the authorities. So he was obliged to travel by mule from Tacma to La Paz, a seven-days' journey, going from Arica to Tacma by rail, a tough journey across a desert, without the shade of a spear of grass to relieve the monotony.

"The whole country of Arica and Tacma has been captured by the Chilians," said the doctor. "It is to be kept for ten years. At the end of that time the inhabitants will vote whether to remain in Chili or go back to Peru. The country which gets them must pay $10,000,000 for the prize. Meanwhile Chili is doing every thing possible to make things pleasant for the people with music and games. The Chillians' present purpose is to have a United States of South America, capturing the other countries little by little, and gradually adding to their strength and wealth. They are a blood-thirsty people, loving war, and extremely brutal in carrying it on. They murder men, women and children with impartial cruelty, ripping them open with big knives.

Our journey from Tacma was one of terrible suffering. It was upon a high table-land, reaching an elevation of 16,500 feet, and for five days we journeyed at an elevation of 14,500 feet. The air was so rarefied that we suffered much from sorocho, the chief symptoms of which were difficulty in breathing, prostrating muscular weakness and bleeding at the nose and ears We passed the beautiful volcano of Tacosa, which discharges across the road a river, the water of which is fatal to human life. Men often commit suicide on the table-land; they suffer so much from sorocho. There is also great danger from lightning, which is frequent and violent At one time three members of a party, in which I was, were prostrated by lightning, and a fourth was stricken blind for eleven days. The wind is so violent here that trees can not grow, and the vegetation is mat-like, closely hugging the ground.

Dr. Rosby crossed the Andes with much tribulation, and went to work among the valleys of the eastern slope. He advises investors to keep away from the old Spanish silver mines, and says that any belief that they were crudely worked is a mistake. The Spaniards did not leave much mineral richness behind in their mines. "In Bolivia," he said, "half the silver is counterfeit. A Consul, who had grown tired of making coin sold his counterfeiting machine to one of our party."

Among the wonders which the doctor met was a half-pound fish, so sensitive that it attacked any thing which caused a commotion in the water, and so fierce that it would kill horse or man in crossing a stream one hundred feet wide. He found a tribe of Indians so virtuous that they tied the unfaithful to ant-trees, and the little insects would eat them alive, stripping the bones in less than twenty-four hours. In brief, he had a great time.—N. Y. World.

Overfeeding Dairy Cows

A very usual cause of barrenness in cows and other domestic animals, is excessive fat. Cows of improved beef breeds are more liable to this than those having less natural tendency to lay on fat. Heifers well kept during winter, and turned on fine pastures in the spring, become fat before autumn. A thrifty heifer can be wintered in good condition on good tame hay, with a little bran or other non-fattening food. If the animal is given a warm shelter, very little grain is advisable, and the supply of hay should be regulated by actual wants. Freedom and exercise are to be given at all times when the weather is not too severe. As soon as the grass is well started in spring, heifers and cows in calf, should be turned out where they will be compeled to travel a great deal for food. In well-fed herds the barren cows are usually those which are inclined to fatten, rather than those which change their food into large quantities of milk. —Prairie Farmer.

Venerable but Good.

That is a good story they are now telling at the expense of the Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks, of Boston. Here is the way it runs: The genial autocrat was fishing one day in the yacht of a well known character of East Gloucester named Capt. Cook, who follows the sea for a livelihood. In conversation Capt. Cook informed Dr. Holmes that the last fisherman who had hired his boat was Dr. Brooks. "He was very pleasant company," Capt. Cook was kind enough to say, "but he swore a good deal for a clergyman." "He did what?" inquired Dr. Holmes, aghast. "He swore," stoutly reiterated Capt. Cook. "Oh, nonsense, I don't believe it," said the doctor. "Well, what do you call this?" inquired the old fisherman. "He got a haddock on his hook and he had a great deal of trouble to get it near the boat. At last he landed him and I said, said I: 'Well, for a haddock that fish pulled d—n hard.' 'Yes, he did,' said Dr. Brooks. Now, what's that but swearing?" The only trouble about the story is that it is simply an adaptation, a revival. The original yarn upon which it was built celebrated its centennial the year that Ananias and Sapphira dissolved partnersaip. It has maintained its vitality ever since at the expense of several scores of clergymen, and is likely to run until the crack of doom unless the supply of doctors of divinity runs out.—New York Tribune.

Fine Acting.

Ellen Terry once having received special courtesy from a newspaper man, offered to introduce him to Mr. Irving, but unfortunately when, shortly afterward, the opportunity of doing so presented itself, she had utterly forgotten his name, but felt that it would be an ill compliment to tell him so. Her ready wit did not forsake her in this trying emergency, and she promptly said to him: "Do you know, I've made a bet with Mr. Irving, and you can decide it. I say you spell your name one way; he says another. Write it for me." All unaware of the trick which was being played upon him, the gentleman wrote his name and handed it to the actress. She glanced at it hastily, laughed, and said gayly, "I've won the bet." It was such a realistic bit of acting that the newspaper man, although it was his business to criticise plays and players, never detected it.

Moneybags Hears Patti.

Her rosy mouth is just a mint
To coin her breath in golden dollars;
The higher box and parquette sell,
The higher Patti tra-la-laders.

Oh! when she sings her bosom swells,
She soars the heavens like a comet;
And every time her pearled mouth opes,
A hundred dollar note flies from it.

The soul is thrilled with wondrous song,
Which stirs a fellow up so that he Feels his heart go pit-a-pat,
But, at the price, not pity Patti.

Protecting the Family.

"Have you an auction at your house to-day, Mr. Sly?"

"No, sir!"

"Then what's the meaning of that black and red flag flying in your front yard?"

"Smallpox, sir."

"Smallpox? Good heavens! You don't mean to tell me"——

He was Delicate.

All the pretty girls in town were at Mrs. Walter Lawrence's dance, but no paper has yet found room for the colossal cheek of the dude who immortalized himself on that occasion. He had been dancing, and sat down with his partner near a window which had been opened for ventilation. The moment the air struck him he shivered, and turning to the girl, whose neck and arms were bare, said: "I cawn't stand that drawght. Would you mind changing seats with me?"—New York Star.

A Chicago Woman's Way.

A Dakota woman who wanted a fur cloak began trapping a mink and tanning the skins. These she sent to St. Paul, where they have just been made into a beautiful cloak, for which she was offered $125. A Chicago woman, it may be added, wanted a beautiful fur cloak about the same time. She began trapping, caught a single animal and now has a cloak worth $500. It wasn't a quadruped she caught, though.—Chicago Tribune.

WITTY LABOUCHERE.

Two Anecdotes Regarding the Diplomatic Career of the Famous Editor.

Henry Labouchere, M. P., editor of London Truth, was, for many years after the war, secretary of the English legation in Washington. He is remembered here as a very wild young man. He knew everybody and figured in society of all grades.

One day a rather green member of Congress called at the legation and asked if he could see the Minister.

"You can see me, I am his secretary," said Labouchere.

"But I want to see the Minister," said the Congressman.

"The Minister is not in."

"All right, I'll wait for him."

"Certainly, sir; have a seat."

The Congressman took a chair and a newspaper, lighted a cigar and settled down for a comfortable time of it. He turned to Labouchere, who sat reading a novel and asked:

"Do you know when he will be back?"

"I do not," was the curt reply. The Congressman lighted another cigar and strolled about the office until another hour was gone.

"Do you think he will be back this evening?"

"Hardly."

"To-morrow?"

"I guess not."

"Well, when will he probably be here?"

"Really, sir, I can not tell you. The Minister sailed for England yesterday and did not indicate when he intended to return," replied Labouchere, without lifting his eyes from his book.

Labouchere was promoted from the secretaryship of the legation in Washington to a similar position with the English legation at Vienna. There he was known as the liveliest Briton at the court, and many are the tales that are told of his reckless escapades. Once, on his way to London on leave of absence, he stopped at Monaco and lost his last penny at roulette. He did not blow his brains out, as the victims of that famous establishment so often do, but retired to his elegant rooms and entertained like a lord until he could get a remittance from some friends in England. As soon as it came he threw it down on the gaming table, doubled five or six times, paid his bills and set out for home.—Toledo Blade.

THE FRANCS TIREURS.

Bands of Guerillas Who Flourished During the Franco-German War.

Between Laon and Rheims, I passed through Chalons and Epernay, at which places I saw, for the first time, the Francs Tireurs, or free-shooters, a corps to which I must devote a few lines by way of description. The corps was, in the most comprehensible possible meaning of the word, irregular. The men who composed it were not only irregular in every thing they did, but appeared to glory in their irregularity They seemed to have very few officers, and the few they had were seldom, if ever, to be seen on duty with the men. The latter had evidently souls above obedience, for they did very much what they liked, and in the manner they liked. They evidently hated the regular army, and the latter returned the compliment with interest. When at Epernay I witnessed a skirmish between a battalion of regular infantry and a small party of German Uhlans, who were evidently feeling their way, and trying to find out what was the strength of the French troops there. The officer commanding the French outpost behaved with great judgment, trying by retiring his men to draw on the Uhlans, and find out their numbers. He had almost succeeded in enticing the enemy to advance, and had managed to hide the strength of his detachment, when all at once a body of Francs Tireurs came up, and without waiting, or even asking for orders, they began at once to blaze away at the Germans, causing the latter to retreat. The officer commanding was very angry, and sent orders to the irregulars that they were to cease firing forthwith; but they took no notice of what was said, many of them declaring in a loud voice that the regulars were playing the game of the enemy, and did not want any of the latter to be defeated or killed. When an attempt was made to find out who was in command of the Francs Tireurs no such person could be found, and on an order being given that the commanding officer would cause an official inquiry to be made into the conduct of the irregulars the whole corps, not less than five hundred strong, vanished and dispersed, so that they could no more be found.—All the Year Round.

Microcosm of a Lunatic.

Some lunatics seem to live in a world of their own. An old lady once astonished and amused us by exclaiming, without any warning or prevocation. Two cats and the bird of paradise are waiting to convey you to your heavenly home, and you are to sit for nine days between the cats and the bird of paradise." Then she stopped and forgot that she had said any thing It was like an alarm clock suddenly going off, startling every one going on, and ceasing just as quietly and surprisingly. A patient lived in the bath-room and made friends with the rats, for whom shs had a great affection. They would actually do what they were told. Some one else thought she was the wife of President Buchanan, and had the hallucination that her husband frequently ran a locomotive through Washington avenue, Philadelphia, with a big bonnet in front of it, to remind her of the annoying fact that in her young days she had been a milliner.—North American Review

MEDICAL HINTS.

What to Do in Cases of Neuralgia, St. Vitus Dance and Convulsions.

The nurse's duty in neuralgia is to apply whatever outward application she finds will give relief. A piece of cotton dipped in laudanum laid upon the affected part and covered with oiled silk will some times give ease. A flannel wet with chloroform and applied in the same way is still more effectual; it burns like mustard and must be watched lest it blister. Painting with menthol, which is merely a preparation of oil of peppermint, occasionally relieves. Carbolic acid and glycerine, or tincture of aconite root are used as liniments. Some times a flannel bag filled with bran will quiet the pain for a time. The doctor will give some medicine, as iron, quinine and strychnia or belladonna and probably prescribe change of air. Whatever increases the strength and improves the general health will help rout the foe.

Corea, or St. Vitus' dance, is a severe form of nervous disease which generally occurs in childhood or youth. The face twitches involuntarily, and in some cases the hands are also much affected. It often arises from nervous weakness, and some times follows a sudden fright, a blow or an illness. It is generally recovered from with proper care. The child should be separated from other children, as they are sure to increase the trouble by teasing the sufferer, and by constantly imitating the movements may contract the disease. The food should be nourishing, the patient should live in the sunlight as much as possible and have plenty of fresh air and exercise in some pleasant form, like riding on horseback or working in a garden, Sea bathing is very beneficial, and change of air and scene is generally of use. The medicine ordered must be given with regularity. The attention of the invalid should never be directed to himself; his state of health should be ignored as far as possible. When it can be done without exciting suspicion the use of a mirror should not be permitted. As the strength improves the symptoms usually disappear and in a few weeks no trace of the disease is left.

Convulsions are very alarming to people who are not accustomed to them. They are rarely fatal, and with an adult the principal thing to be done is to prevent the sufferer from hurting himself. Any smooth object can be put between the teeth to avoid the tongue being bitten. The handle of a tooth-brush or of a spoon, a paper-knife or any thing of a like nature that is at hand. The clothes should be unfastened, particularly any bands confining the waist, and the sufferer laid down. If the hands are thrown about they should be held. When the fit is over the person must be put to bed and kept quiet for a time. Babies sometimes have convulsions when teething or from some derangement of the digestion. If the fit lasts for more than a moment the child should be undressed, wrapped in a blanket and put in a warm bath to relax the muscles, the head being covered with a cloth wrung out of cold water. The doctor will lance the swollen gums or prescribe a course of diet which will prevent a recurrence of the attack. It is generally not as alarming as it seems to the mother, but a physician should be consulted to discover, and, if possible, remove the cause.—Elizabeth R. Scovil, in Good Housekeeping.

ALL SORTS OF PIPES.

Commercial Importance of Germany's Great Meerschaum Center.

Ruhla, a mountain village of Thuringia, is the center of the pipe manufacture of Germany. Like Sheffield, it was famous in the middle ages for its arms and armor, and at a subsequent period for its knives. When the use of tobacco became common in Europe it turned its attention to iron smoking pipes Gradually, however, beginning in the seventeenth century, meerschaum and wood were adopted as more suitable materials to work upon. The first meerschaum pipe was carved in the early part of the Thirty Years' war, and Wallenstein is said to have bought it. The true clay is to be procured only at Eski-Scher in Asia Minor, where there are large deposits, and whence it is sent direct to the manufactories at Ruhla, of where there are at present forty, employing almost the whole population of the district.

The number of pipes and other articles dear to smokers turned out is enormous, the yearly average being 540,000 real meerschaums, varying in price from 3d. to £12 apiece; 500,000 imitation meerschaums at from 1s. to £1 the dozen; 9,600,000 porcelain pipe bowls, either plain white or gayly painted, rising in price from 4d. to 10s. the dozen; 5,000,000 wooden pipes of infinite variety in size, form, ornamentation and price, the common kinds being extremely cheap and those artistically carved fetching a comparatively high price; 3,000,000 bowls of clay or lava, plain at about 3d., of better kinds at 3s., the dozen; 15,000,000 pipes composed of separate parts (bowl, stick, cover, etc.), from 5d. to £25 the dozen.

There are five qualities of meerschaum used in the making of pipes; the best is known by its facile absorption of the nicotine juice of tobacco, which gradually develops into a rich brown blush upon the surface, and when this process is well advanced the pipe becomes almost invulnerable without being hard. A specimen of this kind sold at Vienna for £50, although it was not very highly carved.—London Times.

BILL NYE'S AFFLICTION.

The Humorist Succumbs to the Attacks of Seven Hot-Headed Boils.

I am just having a highly humorous experience with boils. To others this announcement will come with no element of sadness, perhaps, but to me it brings a thrill of the keenest and most poignant anguish. A man might go all over a whole county and not find any thing more poignant than these boils seem to me.

There are seven of these little blossoms, and they hang in a ripe cluster on the back of my neck, about two inches below what the phrenologists call love of home.

I had never brought out a boil until last week, though I have led a very checkered life, but on Thursday morning I awoke to find myself the parent of seven cunning little red-headed boils about the size of pumpkin-seed.

They are small, but oh how restless they are, and how they struggle with each other for supremacy!

People who live here (Asheville, N. C.) say these boils are a result of the climate. The air here is especially calculated to bring out any thing in the line of latent humor. A man who had been running a humorous weekly paper in the far West came here and in two weeks he broke out so that his friends had to do him up in a poultice seven feet long.

I am not doing much for these boils, because I want to teach them to be self-reliant and depend upon themselves. One of them was a puny little thing at first, and I felt sorry for it when my friends told me about it. I can not see these boils, of course, as they are not in the direct line of vision, being on the back of my neck. So I get a friend—one I can trust—and I let him come and tell me how they are doing from time to time.

This little boil at first did not bid fair to hold out more than a day or two, but yesterday it began to throw aside its lethargy and to realize that life is real. It is fully abreast of the others now and has a large and very active crater to it.

For three days I put various things on the boils; among others soap, sugar, the white of an egg, ground flaxseed, bread and milk, bread and molasses, etc., etc., etc. There were other things recommended, but as the boils were all in a cluster I had to try one thing at a time. With seven boils well distributed I might have tried several remedies at once, but I did the best I could. In three days I have rendered thirteen dollars worth of groceries entirely useless to the consumer.

One great difficulty has been the unsatisfactory results of my efforts to get any sleep. Before I was overtaken by the poll-evil I used to rest on the back of my head and neck at night a good deal, but after a few experiments with my head pillowed on these seven little hot-headed boils I found that it made my head too high.

Boils visit the rich and poor alike, the humble and the exalted. They are not a mark of greatness, for boils frequently come to the obscure and the unknown. They do not come with the seeking, and they are not to be obtained by study and effort. Boils fall to the lot of many whose lives would otherwise be void of incident. To such they are indeed a great benison, or may be used as such. How many people do we know who have naught else to show us in the way of progress, but a kind Providence has bestowed a boil upon them now and then, which they can exhibit as an evidence that they are not remaining absolutely stagnant?

The felon also is a queer article, the usefulness of which has not been thoroughly made clear to my mind. There are ninety-eight different things that are good for a felon, each of which will make it ache first rate, and that seems to be the principal object both with felons and boils. Some cut the finger open in treating a felon and scrape the bone with a corncob or a wood rasp. About the only way to cure a felon is to seriously injure the finger and then cure the injury.

A lady friend of mine was once attacked by a felon, and in response to the advice of friends used to cut a small, round hole in a lemon every day and in this aperture she would insert the felon. It did not do the felon much good, but it was a great source of comfort to her young son, who crawled out of his crib every night and finished the lemon.—Bill Nye, in Chicago News.

"Never mind about his honesty. You say you know him."

"No, sah! He was de feeblest niggah I eber seed."

THE LOT OF WOMEN.

Why Every Girl Should Acquire a Foundation on Which She Could Build a Livelihood.

The keenest sufferers to-day, the ones most liable to suffer from poverty, are those who have grown up in homes of comfort, if not luxury, and whom circumstances suddenly force into a position where they must support themselves or become objects of charity, thrown on the world without the least preparation to meet its wants or their own.

It is positively criminal for parents to allow their daughters to grow into maturity without laying a foundation on which they can build a livelihood should circumstances demand it. It costs no more time or money to educate a girl to a definite purpose, a definite object, than it does to let her saunter through her school days acquiring little or much as inclination and conscience dictate. Give a purpose to her school life by imbuing her with the desire to develop all her powers, and give her a sense of responsibility by educating her to understand the possibilities of the future, and the wisdom of preparing for that possibility. Nothing gives more dignity and poise to character than the consciousness that one can stand erect and steadfast when the occasion demands. To allow a girl strong and in the possession of her mental and physical powers to grow up without an education that can be turned into money is beyond all things cruel. It places her at an immense disadvantage. She faces the world with the consciousness that marriage is the destiny to which she is consigned by herself and friends. To miss it is to fail to reach the goal, to win the prize. So every unmarried man is viewed in the light of such unwritten hopes, unexpressed, unacknowledged thoughts. Alas! how poor the prize that some have taken!

When a girl at maturity is equipped to meet the future on her own responsibility, she has gained the wisdom to see life without the delusions and false ideas that hold and govern a girl who looks for a position that is the gift of another. When the gift of heart and possessions comes to a girl so educated, she accepts with dignity, because it is not a necessity to her future. Support, position, she could have gained for herself. And she more truly gives herself to a husband who does not need his material gifts nor his name as a mantle to cover inefficiency. Charlotte Bronte years ago said:

"Look at the numerous families of girls in this neighborhood! The brothers of these girls are every one in business or in professions; they have something to do. Their sisters have no earthly employment but household work and sewing; no earthly pleasure but an unprofitable visit, and no hope, in all their lives to come, of any thing better. The great wish, the sole aim, of every one of them is to be married, but the majority will never marry; they will die as they now live. Could men live so themselves? Would they not be very weary? Lucretia spinning at midnight among her maidens, and Solomon's virtuous women, are often quoted as patterns of what the sex ought to be; but the virtuous woman had more to do than to spin and give out portions; she was a manufacturer—she made fine linen and sold it; she was an agriculturist—she bought estates and planted vineyards. Strength and honor were her clothing; the heart of her husband safely trusted in her. She opened her mouth with wisdom; in her tongue was the law of kindness; her children rose up and called her blessed; her husband also praised her. King of Israel! your model of a woman is a worthy model! But, are we, in these days, brought up to be like her? Men of Yorkshire! do your daughters reach this lofty standard? Can they reach it? Can you help them to reach it? Can you give them a field in which their faculties may be exercised and grow? Men of England! look at your poor girls, many of them fading round you, dropping off in consumption or decline; or, what is worse, degenerating into sour old maids, or, what is worse than all, reduced to strive, by scarce modest coquetry and debasing artifice, to gain that position and consideration by marriage which to celibacy is denied."

Free every girl from the thralldom of false standard, false ideas. Let her decide her destiny unfettered by the thought of helplessness to provide for herself should necessity demand it.

The noblest, truest life for woman is that of wife and mother. But that is noblest and truest only when entered into unselfishly, reverently and for love alone, founded and rooted in deepest respect. A feeling coaxed into a semblance of love because the object bids fair to stand between future needs and the necessity of self-support is not a love born of God, or sanctified by the marriage relation. It is unjust to any girl to place her where her heart can not dictate unbiased. It is cruel to let a woman face the world unable to earn her bread if the future compels her own hands to supply the needs of life for herself and others.—Christian Union.

Digestibility of Cheese.

A chemical society that has experimented with some eighteen varieties of cheese makes the following report: Cheddar was digested in the shortest time, namely, four hours, while unripe, skim, Swiss cheese required ten hours for solution. There appears to be no difference in the digestibility of all sorts of hard cheese, or all soft cheese; but all fat cheeses are dissolved the most rapidly, because, being open by reason of the fat, they are the more readily attacked by the solvent. There seems to be no connection between the digestibility and the percentage of water present in the cheese, though there is some connection with the percentage of fat and the degree of ripeness. From numerous examinations which have been made of the quantity of nitrogen dissolved, it is concluded that cheese, on account of its great digestibility, is the most nourishing of all foods, meat and eggs excepted.—N. Y. World.

—"It will be a surprise to some to learn that there are within the United States as many as sixty-six tribes of Indians, embracing over sixty-eight thousand persons, who are still without a Christian missionary," says an exchange.—Chicago Times.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

SATURDAY, MAY 7.....1887.

Victims of the land swindler, Martin, are writing for information about the land he led those people to believe he had located for them in Owens Valley. The writers of these letters say they have paid Martin hundreds of dollars on his own representation that he had control of thousands of acres of the choicest land in Owens Valley. It is amazing that people can be so easily duped, and not less amazing that such swindling can be carried on with impunity. This man Martin recently wrote to the Land Office at Independence asking the Register to send him the numbers of vacant sections, in order that he might take in more victims. The information was refused. There is surely something lacking in the work of the General Land Office when such a swindler as Martin can continue his work without interruption. Some of his victims have made him return money obtained under false pretenses, but he ought to be arrested and punished like other swindlers.

Working Classes ATTENTION!

We are now prepared to furnish all classes with employment at home, the whole of the time, or for their spare moments. Business new, light and profitable. Persons of either sex easily earn from 50 cents to $5.00 per evening, and a proportional sum by devoting all their time to the business. Boys and girls earn nearly as much as men. That all who see this may send their address, and test the business, we make this offer. To such as are not well satisfied we will send one dollar to pay for the trouble of writing. Full particulars and outfit free. Address GEORGE STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

WONDERS OF THE DEEP.

CORAL SHELLS, and other MARINE CURIOSITIES. We have agents constantly employed in securing rare specimens of the above-named articles, and offer to the public as fine a collection for ONE DOLLAR as they can procure at any regular shell store for double the amount. OUR DOLLAR CABINET, containing over TWENTY VARIETIES of Shells, Coral, etc., will please both old and young. Carefully packed, and mailed postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, on receipt of ONE DOLLAR. Address:

MARINE CURIOSITY SUPPLY CO.,

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, MAY 7.....1887.

BORN.

CASTRO—At Lone Pine, April 9, 1887, to Mr. and Mrs. Castro, a daughter.

Messrs. R. and D. Hessian made a visit to this locality this week.

Dr. Long and J. E. Reynolds, of Lone Pine, were in town Thursday.

A. R. Conklin has gone to San Francisco to attend a meeting of the Grand Lodge I. O. O. F.

Charley Summers was in town this week gathering up cattle to take to the Long Valley range.

Jerry Mairs got back from Mojave on Wednesday, bringing with him a fine, new buggy for Judge Hannah.

S. D. Thurston left for Stockton on Thursday morning, having in charge an insane man named Chandler.

John Barnes was up from Keeler this week on business connected with the settling of the O'Malley estate.

The Independence Brass Band and Reub Spear's canary still continue to fill the night with soul-inspiring strains.

Mrs. Samuels came up from San Francisco this week on a visit to her mother, Mrs. Lewis, at Camp Independence.

Fruit growers in the vicinity of Lone Pine are sanguine of a large fruit crop. The frost has done no damage worth mention.

Messrs. Bulpit and Smith, of Bishop Creek, made Independence a visit this week. They report things flourishing in that section.

The County Hospital will be removed from Camp Independence to Lone Pine. Mrs. A. Stewart has the contract for the coming year.

Frank Vinson came up from Keeler and spent a few days in town at the beginning of the week. He and Bob Wimberly have the Indiana mine leased for two years, and we hope to hear of them making a complete success of the undertaking.

Strawberries are reported to be in the market at Lone Pine. Doubtless strawberries and cream is a delicious dish, still one of our young men came to the conclusion that it is rather thin diet when not backed by something more substantial.

Miss Minnie Thomson returned home on Monday from Bishop Station. Miss Thomson has taught the school at this place for several terms and given the utmost satisfaction. She holds a first grade county certificate and is one of our most successful teachers.

On Monday last a little daughter of Mr. Tibbets, while around the barn, fell from a manger, dislocating her left arm at the elbow. She was brought to Independence immediately and the arm was set by Doctor Woodin. Though very painful, the accident will not result in any permanent injury.

Independence will have a grand Fourth of July celebration. There will be horse racing, a match game of base ball, foot-racing, barbecue and a grand ball in the evening. A cordial invitation is extended to every person in the county. List of purses and prizes will appear in our next issue.

A. K. Briggs passed through town on Monday with a lot of fine driving horses, which he was taking to the lower country to sell. A profitable market is being developed for our horses below, and as the stock is being greatly improved we expect to see it assume considerable proportions.

A white man in Nye county, Nevada, sold whiskey to an Indian. The Indian drank the liquor, then killed his squaw and a white man and wound up by killing himself. The man who sold the whiskey is named George Dahlstrom; he has been tried before District Judge Sabin, found guilty and sent to prison.

A ball will be given for the benefit of the 18th District Brass Band, of Independence, at Mairs' Hall, on Friday evening, May 20th. Tickets can be had at any of the business houses, prices, $1 50, admitting gentleman and ladies. The young men are earnestly endeavoring to succeed and should be encouraged.

Early on Saturday morning a barn belonging to the Diaz boys, at Lone Pine, was completely destroyed by fire. It was quite a large structure, with stalls for sixteen head of horses. There were several sets of harness and a saddle in the barn at the time, which were also destroyed. The cause of the fire is not known. There was no insurance.

The Esmeralda News of last Saturday contained the following: "J. H. Prince has rented his Silver Palace Saloon to Jack Downward, who will take charge tomorrow. It is with regret that we chronicle the departure of Jim Prince, and old and esteemed resident of Hawthorne. He intends leaving on or about the 5th [Thursday] for Inyo county, where he has a large tract of land."

LADIES will find relief from their Costiveness, Swimming in the Head, Colic, Sour Stomach, Headache, Kidney troubles, etc., by taking a dose of Simmons Liver Regulator after dinner or supper, so as to move the bowels once a day. Mothers will have better health and the babies will grow more robust by using the Regulator. If an infant shows signs of Colic, nothing like a few drops in water for relief. The Genuine has the red Z on front of wrapper.

A Close Observer.

Little Dot—What does Mr. Nicefellow go to your house so often for?

Little Dick—He wants to marry Nell.

"Is they engaged?"

"No."

"Did he say he wanted to marry her?"

"No."

"Then how do you know he does?"

"Oh, he acts so like a fool!"

Mining Prospects.

The feeling in mining circles is that a prosperous season is being entered upon. The prospect is better than for several years past. Mr. McKenzie has been shipping ore all winter from the New Coso mines and has a force of men now at work. A new hoisting works has been put in which will greatly facilitate matters. A force is also at work in the Defiance. The Minnietta mine, in the Lookout region is very promising indeed. Arthur Smith and others are working steadily taking out high grade ore. This is undoubtedly a valuable mine. Frank Fitzgerald is getting in coal preparatory to starting the furnace at Lookout. Messrs. Boland and Gorman are experimenting with flue dust and soft ore from the old Darwin dumps which, if it proves successful, and it is now thought it will, will afford employment to quite a number of men and become an industry that will add materially to the county's revenues. Mr. N. G. Fairman has a force of millmen and laborers at work on the mill at Panamint, there are several car loads of material at Keeler, which will be put in place as rapidly as it can be delivered. It is thought that the mill will be in running order by the 1st of July. Numerous small mines are paying good woges, enabling their owners to prospect without incurring debts. Considering that our mines are being developed without the aid of capital, and by laboring men, progress has been rapid. Men who started in without a dollar are acquiring competences, and developing their mines in the ratio of their success. A mining county that can live under such circumstances is a good one. Ours not only lives, but is making rapid strides toward becoming the richest on the Coast.

Garfield District.

The Garfield series of mines are in this county, several of which are owned by the Garfield Mining Company limited of London. This company paid its second dividend of twelve and one-half cents per share, or $12,500, on the 28th of March; the previous dividend was of the same amount, and is from the property from which the Farrington Brothers realized a "long haul." The company is encountering rich ore every day, uncovering, taking it out, milling it and constant shipments of bullion are being made.

The Hindley is also yielding rich ore. It has filled the pockets of its owners more than once with the golden twenties of "In God we Trust." Ore will soon be shipped from the Hindley to Dayton, Lyon county, for reduction.

The Ida, another very valuable mine, in which was discovered, a few weeks ago, a ledge eighteen inches wide of high grade ore, is still holding out. Considerable rich rock, which has been extracted from the vein, is now on the dump awaiting shipment.

The Abe Lincoln, of the Garfield limited company series, has on exhibition a new ledge, a recent find, assaying very high and two feet wide.—News.

Fruit Prospects.

In conversation with one of our principal fruit growers recently he stated that the coming season would be very productive. Now that this is so would it not be advisable for our orchardists to come to some understanding, such as is found necessary on the other side. A good market may be opened up if rightly gone about. A common complaint is that shipments are not promptly made, that days, and sometimes weeks will elapse before orders are filled. And also that the fruit is not properly packed for shipment, nor assorted carefully. All orders should be filled as soon as received as the fruit is generally required for some special occasion. A standard size of boxes should be adopted which would carry with them a scale of prices. Also fruit should be assorted in such manner that it shall be just as represented. If this is done the confidence of the consignee will be secured, and the result will be that all fruits will command good prices and the demand will exceed the supply. The facilities here for fruit growing are unsurpassed and in the near future will be one of the chief sources of income.

The Lone Pine Picnic.

Despite the disagreeableness of the weather the pic-nic at Lone Pine last Saturday was quite well attended. All the people in the immediate vicinity were present, and also a few from Independence and Georges Creek. A dance was given in the evening at the hall of Richards & Castro and proved to be very pleasant. A number of young people were present from this vicinity and they were entertained with the customary hospitality of the Lone Piners. During the evening a lunch was served, to which hearty justice was done. The general verdict was that the occasion was a complete success.

First Lot of Ore.

The first lot of ore worked by the electric system method has just been cleaned up at the Douglas mill. The saving of quicksilver is a little over two pounds to the ton over the old way of working, and the bullion return has been augmented in due proportion. The loss of quicksilver was but 3¼ pounds for the entire lot of fifteen tons of ore. All mill men know that the natural waste in handling and that which is continually escaping from the pans with the steam which arises from them will readily account for this small loss.—Lyon County Times.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

GEORGE H. SANDERSON, Plaintiff, vs. ARGUS SILVER MINING COMPANY (a corporation), Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and the complaint filed in the office of the Clerk of said county.

J. W. P. LAIRD and RICHARD S. MINER, Plaintiff's Attorneys.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Argus Range Silver Mining Company (a corporation), Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff, in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served elsewhere, within thirty days, or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover a judgment in favor of plaintiff herein and against said defendant for the sum of $2146 27 alleged to be due plaintiff from defendant for and upon certain assigned accounts, claims and demands, as follows: $698 48 on an account stated June 29th, 1884, between defendant and the firm of White and Anthony and for goods and merchandise sold and delivered to, and buckboard hired to, and money laid out for defendant at its request by said firm; also $99.71 on an account stated June 21st, 1884, between defendant and one H. Jackson for work performed by said Jackson for defendant at its request; also $298.12 on an account stated June 30th 1884, between defendant and one Theodore Wibbelt and for work performed by said Wibbelt for defendant at its request; also $208 86 on an account stated June 30th, 1884, between defendant and one Henry Mettler and for work performed by said Mettler for defendant at its request; also $20 97 on an account stated June 24th, 1884, between defendant and one Robert Harry and for work performed by said Harry for defendant at its request; also $89 20 on an account stated June 29th, 1884, between defendant and one Joseph Feehan, and for work performed by said Feehan for defendant at its request; also $17 97 on an account stated between defendant and one H. G. Chickering, and for work performed by said Chickering for defendant at its request; also $8 37 on an account stated between defendant and one John Daly July 5th, 1884, and for work performed by said Daly for defendant at its request; also $4 14 on an account stated July 5th, 1884, between defendant and one George Hunn, and for work performed by said Hunn for defendant at its request; also $162,75 for work performed by one P. Valenzuela for defendant at its request; also $21 on an account stated June 28th 1884, between one Albert Roustadt and defendant and for work performed by said Roustadt for defendant at its request; also $10 90 on an account stated June 29th 1884, between one A. Roustadt and defendant and for work performed by said Roustadt for defendant at its request; also $54 49 on an account stated between one Juan Cordova and defendant June 29th, 1884, and for work performed by said Cordova for defendant at its request; also $18 12 on an account stated June 29th, 1884, between one A Saredis and defendant, and for work performed by said Saredis for defendant at its request; also $97 37 on an account stated July 1st, 1884, between one Ah Foo and defendant and for work performed by said Ah Foo for defendant at its request; also $37 on an account stated July 1st 1884, between one Con Sam and defendant and for work performed by said Con Sam for defendant at its request; also $38 83 on an account stated July 1st, 1884, between one Ah Fon and defendant, and for work performed by said Ah Fon for defendant at its request; and also for interest on each of said foregoing accounts from said several dates above named at the rate of seven per cent per annum; all of said foregoing accounts and indebtedness having been contracted by defendant in Inyo County, and all of said indebtedness, and each and all of said accounts and claims above specified were before the commencement of said action, duly sold and assigned to plaintiff, who is now the owner and holder of the same; and for costs of suit all of which fully appears in the complaint filed herein, which is hereby referred to, a copy of which is served herewith.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint as above required, the said plaintiff will take judgment against you for the sum of $2146 27, interest as aforesaid, and costs of suit.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, this 15th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty six.

THE SUN'S HEAT.

A British Scientist Who Thinks It Will Last Ten Million Years Longer.

A brilliant audience filled the theater of the Royal Institution while Prof. Sir William Thomson expounded the latest dynamical theories regarding the "probable origin, total amount and possible duration of the sun's heat." During the short 3,000 years or more of which man possesses historic records there was, the learned physicist showed, no trace of variation in solar energy; and there was no distinct evidence of it even, though the earth as a whole, from being nearer the sun, received in January 6½ per cent. more heat than in July.

But in the millions of years which geology carried us back it might safely be said there must have been great changes. How had the solar fires been maintained during those ages? The scientific answer to this question was the theory of Helmholtz that the sun was a vast globe gradually cooling, but as it cooled shrinking, and that the shrinkage—which was the effect of gravity upon its mass—kept up its temperature. The total of the sun's heat was equal to that which would be required to keep up 46,000 millions of millions of millions horse-power, or about 78,000 horse-power for every square metre—a little more than a square yard—and yet the modern dynamical theory of heat shows that the sun's mass would require only to fall in or contract thirty-five metres per annum to keep up that tremendous energy. At this rate the solar radius in 2,000 years' time would be about one-hundredth per cent. less than at present.

A time would come when the temperature would fall, and it was thus inconceivable that the sun would continue to emit heat sufficient to sustain existing life on the globe for more than 10,000,000 years. Applying the same principles retrospectively, they could not suppose that the sun had existed for more 20,00,000 years—no matter what might have been its origin—whether it came into existence from the clash of worlds pre-existing or of diffused nebulous matter. There was a great clinging by geologists and biologists to vastly longer periods, but the physicist, treating it as a dynamic question with calculable elements, could come to no other conclusion materially different from what he had stated.

Sir William Thomson declined to discuss any chemical source of heat, which, whatever its effect when primeval elements first came into contact, was absolutely insignificant compared with the effects of gravity after globes like the sun and the earth had been formed. In all these speculations they were in the end driven to the ultimate elements of matter—to the question—when they thought what became of all the sun's heat—what is the luminiferous ether that fills space, and to that most wonderful form of force upon which Faraday spent so much of the thought of his later years—gravity.—London Telegraph.

The Ladies of Lima.

The ladies of Lima are all eyes. They have the reputation of being, as a class, the most beautiful in the world, and meeting them on the way to mass in the morning or shopping later in the day, one can see how they obtained it. But, knowing them in their homes, the opinion changes, and you conclude after calm reflection that they are not so pretty as the women of New York. It is the manta, which they wear in such a coquettish way, that gives them their reputation for beauty, for it conceals every feature except their bewitching eyes and lovely olive complexion. No matter how ugly her mouth or her nose is; no matter how high her cheek bones or large her ears; no matter whether she is as scrawny as a scarecrow or as bald as a bat, a manta will make any woman with pretty eyes look handsome, and, like charity, it covers a multitude of sins. The garment, which is peculiar to Peru, and is worn by ladies of all ages and social positions, from the president's wife to the laundress who comes after your linen, is a sort of foster sister to the mantilla of Spain. It is usually of crepe from China, and costs anywhere from $10 to $500, according to its quality.—Buenos Ayres Herald.

A Gorgeous Baron in Costume.

Baron Zedwith, the military attache of the German legation, was the most gorgous thing in regimentals there. His light blue coat, his tight white breeches and his beautiful patent leather boots made one soberly uniformed envious, and when it came to aigrettes, and loops and cords, and frogs and medals, any American bandmaster would die of envy. He carries a helmet that, with its white horse tail, is as large as a beehive, and it fills his arm like a debutante's biggest bouquet. His patent leather boots, that reach up over his knees, do not look like real warfare, or even riding academy practice, and the ferocious looking silver spurs, that ring musically every time he sets his heel down in the decisive Prussian marching step, have no points on the rowels at all, simply little round pieces of silver, that only look dangerous at a distance, and warn the wearers of tulle dresses to keep away.—Globe-Democrat.

The French Bicycle Corps.

Regularly organized bicycle corps are now attached to the French army, and in recent maneuvers they have done all such work as the carrying of orders and dispatches, and done it with more speed and punctuality than mounted troopers. In some cases bicyclists have accomplished journeys of fifty and sixty miles a day for six or eight days in succession. At this rate a bicyclist is not only more efficient than a horseman but cheaper; for a bicycle costs originally less than half the price of a cavalry horse, wears as long, is far less expensive to keep and is much less likely to be put hors du combat by a stray bullet.—Chicago Tribune.

The Emperor's Trout.

Emperor William, of Germany, has three physicians always in attendance—Von Lour, physician-in-chief of the imperial staff, Leuthold and Firman. Whenever his majesty is indisposed these three physicians hold a consultation. The emperor is fond of fish, but as sea fish is difficult of digestion he lives to a large extent on trout. In order to meet the imperial want in this respect a species of trout has been introduced from California in the river on the land of the grand duke of Baden.—Chicago Tribune.

A Patient's Gratitude.

During the cholera epidemic in Nashville, Tenn., the late Dr. Bowling attended an old blind negro, who eked out an existence by playing the flute at the street corners. He recovered, and with a heart overflowing with gratitude he took his flute and sat under the doctor's bedroom window and played it the whole night long. Of all the large fees he ever received the doctor said this was the largest.—Medical Record.

RICHMOND'S FAMOUS FIRE.

How a Great Piece of News Was Treated in the Old Days.

The editor of The Richmond Standard was present, and wrote the following account for his paper the next day:

"Last night the play house in this city was crowded with an unusual audience. There could not have been less than 600 persons in the house. Just before the conclusion of the play the scenery caught fire. The editor of this paper was in the house when the ever to be remembered deplorable accident occurred. He is informed that the scenery took fire in the back part of the house by the raising of a chandelier; that the boy who was ordered by some of the players to raise it stated that if he did so the scenery would take fire, when he was commanded in a peremptory manner to hoist it. The boy obeyed and the fire instantly communicated to the scenery. He gave the alarm in the rear of the stage and requested some of the attendants to cut the cords by which the combustible materials were suspended. The person whose duty it was to perform this became panic stricken and sought his own safety.

"The flames spread almost with the rapidity of lightning, and the fire falling from the ceiling upon the performers was the first notice the audience had of their danger. Even then many supposed it a part of the play, and were a little time restrained from flight by a cry from the stage that there was no danger. The performers and their attendants in vain endeavored to tear down the scenery. The fire flashed in every part of the house with a rapidity horrible and astonishing, and, alas! gushing tears and unspeakable anguish deprived me of utterance.

"There was but one door for the greatest part of the audience to pass. Men, women and children were pressing upon each other, while the flames were seizing upon those behind. Those nearest the windows, which were very high, were afraid to leap down, while those behind them were seen catching on fire and writhing in the greatest agony of pain and distress. . . . Imagine what cannot be described. All of those in the pit escaped, and had cleared themselves from the house before those in the boxes could get down, and the door was for some time empty. Those from above were pushing each other down the steps, when the hindermost might have got out by leaping into the pit. There would not have been the least difficulty in descending from the first boxes into the pit."—Richmond Cor. New York Sun.

Roll Call in the House.

A Washington correspondent describes a roll call in the houss of representatives: "'Roll call!' shout the pages, running about the corridors of the house wing. 'Roll call! Yeas and nays! Yeas and nays!' It reminds one of the boys about the theatres or opera singing. 'Opera books! Books of the opera! Libretto! libretto!' The effect, however, is quite different. If you are in the restaurant when an important bill is pending you will witness a stampede when the little fellows run from table to table with their 'Roll call!' Division of the house!' or 'Call of the house!' The latter is a variety, but the former signals to members occur every day. Down into the sub-basement, down into the subterranean committee rooms, into the restaurant, into the bar, along the main corridors, among the reception rooms, and even across to the 'Congressional,' the small boys with the silver badge skip with the cry: 'Roll call!' 'Roll call!' And the members who are interested in that particular measure drop knife and fork, drop gossip with the ladies, drop stories with the gentlemen, drop cocktails and courting and rush toward the hall of the house. This is managed differently from a few years ago, when every member had to be on hand and look out for himself. Now the floor may show less than a quorum when the clerk begins to read, and then before the second call begins for absentees the members have been gathered in from the rooms and corridors, and a pretty full house is recorded."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

New Tanning Substance from Coal.

A new extract of coal is being introduced in Germany for industrial purposes, especially for tanning leather and disinfection generally, to which the name "pyrofuxin" is given by the discoverer, Professor Paulus Reinsch, of Erlangen, Bavaria. Unlike the generality of such compounds, this new material is not a derivative of coal tar, or of any of the distillates of coal, but is obtained directly from coal itself. Pit or bituminous coal contains most of it, and is prepared by being broken into nuts. The crude pyrofuxin is extracted by repeated boilings in a solution of caustic soda. The pyrofuxin enters into solution and is allowed to stand for a time. It is then poured off and a carbonic acid gas is passed through it. The resultant liquor has a specific gravity of 1.025 to 1.030, and holds from ten to fifteen grammes of pyrofuxin to the liter.

In its purified form the compound is a fine, non-triturable substance, without taste or smell, non-poisonous and in appearance like catechu. Some Russian coal contains 18 per cent. of pyrofuxin. After the extraction of this material the coal remains combustible. It is described as being one of the most powerful and effective antiseptics known to science. On this account it is expected to be most valuable for tanning, as being twenty-eight times quicker in action than bark and producing a better result at decreased cost. It will be soon enough to give credence to this alleged leather tanning agent when specimens of good leather are produced.—Scientific American.

Slang in the Restaurant.

Men who write books about slang might find material in some restaurants. In Kansas City there is an abundance of it. Only in one place in St. Louis—on Morgan street—can you hear downright slang in the giving of the orders, and curious it is. If you tell the waiter you want an oyster stew, he shouts out to the kitchen: "Jesse James!" A beefsteak becomes "slaughter in a pan;" plain, black coffee is "coffee in the dark;" potatoes unpeeled are "Murphy with his coat on;" two eggs fried on one side are transformed into "sunny side up;" buckwheat cakes are spoken of in gambler fashion as "stack of reds with copper on top," and batter cakes as "stack of whites."—Waiter in Globe-Democrat.

White Malleable Iron Ore.

A writer upon the products of Arkansas says: "The most remarkable and interesting mineral of all this region is the white malleable iron ore, regarding the existence and malleability of which a great deal of skepticism is said to exist. It is found in the corner of Howard county, adjoining the frontier of Montgomery, Polk and Pike."—Exchange.

A manufacturer of Roubaix, M. Henry Buisini, has just discovered a very curious application of electricity to looms. He adopts an indicator which strikes when a thread in the warp breaks, and thus saves the warper from taking out any of his work to find the flaw, and he need not pay such close attention to the quickly moving threads, which is so injurious to the sight. The invention can be applied to power looms.

Retired List of the Navy.

The retired list of the navy is swelling. There are fifty rear admirals, fifteen commodores, fourteen captains, twelve commanders, twenty lieutenant commanders, forty-one lieutenants, forty-six surgeons, twenty paymasters and seventy-two engineers.—Brooklyn Eagle.

THE SORT OF SERVANTS WHO SEEM TO SERVE THE PUBLIC BEST.

Why One Proprietor Employs Young Women as Waiters—Another Man Prefers Colored Folks—The Virtues of Irish Waiters—The French.

Groups of dapper clerks sat around little tables in a Broadway restaurant down town the other day, while they uncovered their heads to the breeze that blew down from a row of swiftly moving fans that swung from the ceiling. Trim young women in cool dresses tripped about from table to table, took the orders of the hungry young men, and returned at intervals with plates heaped with summer viands. Every once in the while a portly baldheaded man would come in, and a trim girl would trip up to him, too, and smilingly take his order.

Behind the cashier's desk sat a gray haired man with glasses who raked in all the money that the dapper young clerks and the baldheaded men paid for their meals. He was the man who first started a restaurant in town with young women for waiters.

"Why do you employ girls?" a reporter asked.

"Because I have found from the start that the hungry public like their service best," the gray haired man instantly replied. "They are neat and clean, and they are much more polite and attentive than any male waiters that I ever came across."

"What wages do they earn?"

"With board included, from $4 to $6 a week, according to their ability to serve quickly and satisfactorily. They work for this firm from 8 in the morning until 7 at night, with recess for dinner and supper."

COLORED FOLKS.

The next day after listening to the grayhaired restaurateur's encomium of his fair waiter's the reporter dropped in for luncheon at a well known Park row dining saloon. A genial old colored man, whose face was wreathed in smiles, and who wore a long, snow-white apron, spread a napkin on the table at which he sat down, handed a bill of fare to him, and with a polite "Yes, sir, all right," hurried off to the kitchen to bring the eatables ordered. He spread the full dishes before the reporter when he came back ten minutes later, and then stood at a vacant table some distance away and behind the reporter and patiently waited until the meal was finished. Then he asked if anything else was wanted, and receiving a negative reply, handed the customer a check, bowed and retired. Behind the desk at which the reporter paid the check sat a man who had been over a quarter of a century in the business of catering to the whims and wants of hungry business men who are always in a hurry.

"Why do I keep colored waiters?" he said. "Why, because I wouldn't have any others. My customers like them, and want them. I have waiters here who came to work for me before the war My experience is that colored waiters are by far the best in the market.

They are more amenable to discipline than white men, and they certainly are more civil and attentive. They don't make life a burden to a guest if he doesn't choose to fee them. Who ever heard of a strike where colored waiters were employed and treated as they ought to be? Their pay varies according to their ability, but as a rule it averages $8 a week and board. Here the waiters treat us well and we treat them likewise. When they are sick they draw half pay regularly until they are well again."

NEAT IRISHMEN.

The reporter sauntered later on over to the famous rotunda of another down town inn. Business men sat in shoals around the lunch counter propped upon high stools. Neat Irishmen with white aprons scurried back and forth between the invisible kitchen and the counters, bringing all sorts of hot and cold dainties. For three hours the procession back and forth was kept up, and for three hours the shoals of business men shot the food down their throats with that heroic indifference to dyspepsia and that wild and awful haste that are the peculiar characteristics of the down town business man. The jingle of coin on the lunch counter frequently mingled with the clatter of dishes, and bespoke the welcome fee to the waiter. Upstairs in the manager's office the manager paused a long time, as if wrestling with a problem, when he was asked why he preferred white waiters.

"Well," he replied at length, "they have been in the house ever since the days when Charles Dickens was a guest here. As far as I am able to judge, the white waiters are the most expeditious in service, and therefore the most satisfactory to the guests and ourselves. We have a large custom daily, and it is an object to get the customers served and let them depart quickly. Delay would mean a loss of 33⅓ per cent. of income, which is a big item when the noon trade climbs up into the thousands. The Irish waiters handle the rush of orders so that we have no loss at all. We have colored help for hall boys and find that as such they are without an equal. In the dining room proper, where things go more leisurely than in the rotunda, we have French waiters, and they probably are the best for that sort of service. The Irish waiters get from $8 to $9 a week and board, and the French about the same with the perquisites of fees, which are sometimes something handsome."—NewYork Sun.

A Bitter Experience.

If there is one thing that, more than any other, tends to make life bitter, it is to have a story or a joke at whose birth one has personally presided stigmatized as a "chestnut." There is one odd instance that came under my notice the other day. A gentleman returning home one very clear night lately with his little girl was pointed by her to the Pleaides. "Look!" she exclaimed. "See those little stars all cuddled close together to keep warm!" A pretty story, isn't it? Naturally, the father told it proudly to the first person he met, who happened to be a young woman who writes for the press, a circumstance of which he was not aware. The next day but one the gentleman, meeting an acquaintance, told him the story of the little girl and the stars. "Chestnut!" said the acquaintance; "I saw that story in the papers." The father was aghast and indignant. To have his own little story, which he knew was as new and original as could be, pronounced an old one, borrowed from the papers! It was a fact, nevertheless, for he discovered presently that the story had appeared in one of the daily papers on the very day after he related it to the young lady. Nobody could blame her. But the father's exclusive property in his daughter's odd saying had "ceased and determined" at a very early stage in its career.—Boston Post.

Lightning and the Cocoanut.

Sir Emerson Tennent long ago called attention to the power of the cocoanut palm to conduct lightning, and the subject is again called up by a Ceylon paper. Five hundred of these trees were struck on a single plantation during a succession of thunder storms in April, 1869. But the trees suffer terribly from the effects, for, however slightly they may be touched, they are sure to die. Even if only the edges of the leaves are singed, or only a few of them turned brown, the tree will in the end wither gradually and perish.—Chicago Times.

DEATH IN THE WATER.

IS THE ELEMENT WE DRINK DECIMATING THE PEOPLE?

How a Universal Menace to Health May Be Disarmed.

A few years ago the people in a certain section in one of the leading cities of the State were prostrated with a malignant disease, and upon investigation it was found that only those who used water from a famous old well were the victims.

Professor S. A. Lattimore, analyst of the New York State Board of Health, upon analyzing water from this well, found it more deadly than the city sewage!

Not long since the writer noticed while some men were making an excavation for a large building, a stratum of dark colored earth running from near the surface to hard pan. There it took another course toward a well near at hand. The water from this well had for years been tainted with the drainings from a receiving vault, the percolations of which had discolored the earth!

A similar condition of things exists in every village and city where well water is used, and though the filtering which the fluids receive in passing through the earth may give them a clear appearance, yet the poison and disease remains, though the water may look never so clear.

It is still worse with the farmer, for the drainage from the barn-yard and the slops from the kitchen eventually find their way into the family well!

The same condition of things exists in our large cities, whose water supplies are rivers fed by little streams that carry off the filth and drainage from houses. This "water" is eventually drunk by rich and poor alike with great evil.

Some cautious people resort to the filter for purifying this water, but even the filter does not remove this poison, for water of the most deadly character may pass through this filter and become clear, yet the poison disguised is there.

They who use filters know that they must be renewed at regular periods, for even though they do not take out all the impurity, they soon become foul.

Now in like manner the human kidneys act as a filter for the blood, and if they are filled up with impurities and become foul, like the filter, all the blood in the system coursing through them becomes bad, for it is now a conceded fact that the kidneys are the chief means whereby the blood is purified. These organs are filled with thousands of hair like tubes which drain the impurities from the blood as the sewer pipes drain impurities from our houses.

If a sewer pipe breaks under the house, the sewage escapes into the earth and fills the house with poisonous gas; so if any of the thousand and one little hair-like sewer tubes of the kidneys break down, the entire body is affected by this awful poison.

It is a scientific fact that the kidneys have few nerves of sensation; and, consequently, disease may exist in these organs for a long time and not be suspected by the individual. It is impossible to filter or take the death out of the blood when the least derangement exists in these organs, and if the blood is not filtered then the uric acid, or kidney poison, removable only by Warner's safe cure, accumulates in the system and attacks any organ, producing nine out of ten ailments, just as sewer gas and bad drainage produce so many fatal disorders.

Kidney disease may be known to exist if there is any marked departure from ordinary health without apparent known cause, and it should be understood by all that the greatest peril exists, and is intensified, if there is the least neglect to treat it promptly with that great specific, Warner's safe cure, a remedy that has received the highest recognition by scientific men who have thoroughly investigated the character of kidney derangements.

They may not tell us that the cause of so many diseases in this organ is the impure water or any other one thing but this poisonous water with its impurities coursing constantly through these delicate organs undoubtedly does produce much of the decay and disease which eventually terminate in the fatal Bright's disease, for this disease, alike among the drinking men, prohibitionists, the tobacco slave, the laborer, the merchant and the tramp, works terrible devastation every year.

It is well known that the liver which is so easily thrown "out of gear," as they say, very readily disturbs the action of the kidneys. That organ when deranged, immediately announces the fact by sallow skin, constipated bowels, coated tongue, and headaches, but the kidney when diseased, struggles on for a long time, and the fact of its disease can only be discovered by the aid of the microscope or by the physician who is skillful enough to trace the most indirect effects in the system to the derangement of these organs, as the prime cause.

The public is learning much on this subject and when it comes to understand that the kidneys are the real health regulators, as they are the real blood purifiers of the system, they will escape an infinite amount of unnecessary suffering, and add length of days and happiness to their lot.

A BOON TO WOMEN

A WOMAN'S GRATITUDE. Mrs. F. Oats, of Shumway, Ill., writes: "When I had used Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' one week, I could walk all over the door-yard, and I could get into a wagon and ride two miles to see my neighbors. I had not been able to walk out in the door-yard for six months. After using the 'Favorite Prescription' two weeks, I rode in a wagon ten miles; my neighbors were all surprised to see me up and going about and helping to do my housework, after doctoring with thirteen of the best physicians we could get—and the last one told my husband that I would never be able to do my housework any more. I am thankful to my God that I wrote to you, for I had suffered from 'Female Weakness' until I had almost given up in despair."

TERRIBLE PAIN. Mrs. F. E. Wilcox, Friendship, N. Y., writes: "For five or six years I had been badly troubled with female weakness and terrible pains across the small of my back and pit of the stomach. Three bottles of Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' acted like a charm, and cured me completely, to my great joy."

MARVELOUS BENEFITS. Rev. Sidney C. Davis, Galien, Michigan, writes: "I wish, in this letter, to express my gratitude for Mrs. Davis and myself for the great good which has been accomplished in her case by the use of your proprietary medicines. When she began to take them, in January last, she could not endure the least jar, could walk but a very few steps at a time, and could stay up only about thirty minutes at a time. Now she not only sits up almost the entire day, but can walk around, call on her neighbors, two and three blocks away, and not feel any injurious effects at all. When we consider that she had kept her bed the greater part of the time for fourteen months, and would lose repeatedly the advance she had made, her progess now seems marvelous. We had almost lost confidence in medical practitioners, and advertised remedies, but have found in your Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pellets' the properties needed, and which we believe will bring about a complete and final recovery."

BED-FAST FOR MONTHS.

TREATING THE WRONG DISEASE.

Many times women call upon their family physicians, one with dyspepsia, another with palpitation, another with backache, or nervousness, another with pain here and there, and in this way they all present alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent doctor, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, they are all symptoms caused by some uterine disorder. While the physician is ignorant of the cause of suffering, he encourages his practice until large bills are made, when the suffering patient is no better, but probably worse for the delay, treatment, and other complications made. A proper medicine directed to the cause would perhaps have entirely removed the disease, thereby instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery.

DOCTORS FAIL. "Female Weakness" Cured.—Mrs. Sarah A. Lovely, Greenfield, Adair Co., Iowa, writes: R. V. Pierce, M. D. Dear Sir—"Having been ill a number of years, and having tried in vain almost every advertised remedy, as well as having paid nearly a hundred dollars to our local physicians, without benefit, I was finally induced to consult you. You advised me to send for your medicines I accordingly sent for your 'Medical Adviser,' six bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' six of your 'Favorite Prescription,' and six vials of your 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets.' When I first began using these I could not stand on my feet. In ninety days I could walk a mile, and do light housework; whilst in six months I was completely cured, and my health has remained perfect ever since. I recommend you and your medicines wherever I go and loan your 'Adviser' to my friends. Two of our most prominent physicians who have read your great work 'The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser,' pronounce it the best family doctor book they have ever seen."

"DO LIKEWISE." Mrs. E. F. Morgan, of Newcastle, Lincoln Co., Maine, says: "Five years ago I was a dreadful sufferer from uterine troubles. Having exhausted the skill of three physicians, I was completely discouraged, and so weak I could with difficulty cross the room alone. I began taking Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and using the local treatment recommended in his 'Common Sense Medical Adviser.' I commenced to improve at once. In three months I was perfectly cured, and have had no trouble since. I wrote a letter to my family paper, briefly mentioning how my health had been restored, and offering to send the full particulars to any one writing me for them, and inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. I have received over four hundred letters. In reply, I have described my case and the treatment used, and have earnestly advised them to 'do likewise.' From a great many I have received second letters of thanks, stating that they had commenced the use of 'Favorite Prescription,' had sent the $1.50 required for the 'Medical Adviser,' and had applied the local treatment so fully and plainly laid down therein, and were much better already."

A THOUSAND THANKS. Mrs. Caroline Byers, corner Duke and Argyle Streets, Halifax, N. S., writes: "Dr. R. V. Pierce, I thank God, and thank you a thousand times, for the relief that your valuable medicines, the 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pellets' have given me. I am perfectly cured of a chronic sickness that had troubled me for years. How my heart is overflowed with joy and gratitude towards you, my tongue can never express."

DOCTOR'S MISTAKE. Mrs. Henry Patterson, of New York City, writes: "I had been under an eminent physician's care for eight months for what he called 'spinal disease.' I became worse during all this time, when, chancing to see a copy of Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser at the residence of a friend, I read that part devoted to 'Woman and her Diseases.' I soon became convinced that my disease was a uterine affection, which, as you say, caused sympathetic backache, inward fever, nervousness, and general debility. I commenced the use of Dr. Pierce's 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery,' applying also the local treatment which he recommends in the Adviser, and in three months I was well and strong."

"ALL RUN DOWN." Mrs. V. H. Peterson, of Lockport, N. Y., had suffered for three years from "female weakness," was greatly emaciated and "all run down" as she expressed it, and Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" and "Golden Medical Discovery" promptly cured her, as they have thousands of similar cases.

OVER-WORKED WOMEN.

For "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated school teachers, milliners, dress-makers, general housekeepers, and over-worked women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best of all restorative tonics.

NOT A "CURE-ALL." Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is not a "Cure-all," but admirably fulfills a singleness of purpose, being a most potent Specific for all those Chronic Weaknesses and Diseases peculiar to women. It is a powerful, general as well as uterine, tonic and nervine, and imparts vigor and strength to the whole system.

It promptly cures nausea and weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating, eructations of gas, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness, in either sex. "Favorite Prescription" is sold by druggists under our positive guarantee. For conditions, see wrapper around bottle. Price Reduced to $1.00 per Bottle, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

EVERY INVALID LADY should send for "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," in which over fifty pages are devoted to the consideration of diseases peculiar to women. Illustrated with numerous wood-cuts and colored plates. It will be sent, post-paid, to any address for $1.50. A large pamphlet, treatise on Diseases of Women, profusely illustrated with colored plates and numerous wood-cuts, will be sent for ten cents in postage stamps. LIVER, BLOOD AND LUNG DISEASES.

LIVER DISEASE. G. W. Lotz, Trudhomme, La., writes: "For four years I suffered from liver complaint and attacks of bilious fever; loss of appetite, nausea, constipation, sometimes diarrhœa, pain in the back of the head, right side and under the shoulder-blades, fullness after eating, general debility, restless nights, tongue coated, etc. After taking four bottles of 'Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets,' I find I am as well as I ever was.

A BAD CASE. Samantha Gaines, Lockport, N. Y., writes: "For six or eight years previous to 1880, I had been troubled with a severe pain in the small of my back, also across my shoulder-blades, with considerable bloating of the stomach from wind; was so nervous at times I could hardly sleep; also troubled with dizziness and hard breathing spells. I was induced by my step-daughter, Mrs. Warner, of Olean, N. Y., to try the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' The effects were marvelous. After taking three bottles I was entirely cured."

GENERAL DEBILITY. S. L. Fisher, Sidney Plains, N. Y., writes: "Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. Dear Sir—My wife suffered for several years from general debility. She had become a confirmed invalid. The physicians who attended her failed to help her, and it seemed as if she must die. On reading one of your Memorandum Books, it occurred to me that your 'Golden Medical Discovery' might help her. I procured a bottle, and, after its use, a change for the better was noticeable, and after using five bottles, she was a well woman. I have recommended it to several, and in every case, it has produced good results. I can never feel too grateful to you for the saving of my wife's life."

GIVEN UP TO DIE. Liver Disease.—Merrit Street, Esq., Druggist, of Bluff Springs, Ala., writes: "Miss Eliza Glenn, of this place, had been sick for more than a year with a severe affection of the liver, but when she was at the lowest, she bought three bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery' from me, and, although before using the medicine she was given up to die by all the attending physicians, her father assures me that she has now fully recovered."

MALARIAL FEVER. Mrs. Caroline Simmonds, Medina, N. Y., writes: "I have been troubled with symptoms of malaria, with fever, for three years, but after using three bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets,' I am happy to say that I am entirely cured, and to-day I am perfectly well and able to do my own work."

DYSPEPSIA CURED. Dyspepsia.—Lucy A. Wood, Taylor's Store, Va., writes: "After many years of great suffering from the evils of dyspepsia, I was induced to try your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and I cannot express the gratitude I feel for the great good it has done me. I do not suffer any pain from eating, and I enjoy life as well as anybody can wish."

DIARRHEA AND COUGH. Mrs. Curtis Bogue, West Enosburg, Vt., writes: "Two bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' cured my cough and chronic diarrhœa. It has worked like a charm in my case. It is truly wonderful. I walked over a mile last week to recommend your medicines."

"THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse the blood, which is the fountain of health, by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength, and soundness of constitution will be established.

Golden Medical Discovery cures all humors, from the common pimple, blotch, or eruption, to the worst Scrofula, or blood-poison. Especially has it proven its efficacy in curing Salt-rheum or Tetter, Fever-sores, Hip-joint Disease, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Enlarged Glands, and Eating Ulcers.

ABSCESS OF LIVER. Isaac Gibson, Kenwood, Pa., writes: "My wife is getting well fast. When she began to use your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' our best doctors in Indiana County said she would die. They said your medicine would do her no good; that she had an ulcer on her liver as large as half a loaf of bread. Well, sir, to our surprise, when she began using your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' she commenced spitting up phlegm for some two weeks, and then commenced spitting up corruption and blood (it looked like what comes out of a blood boil) for some ten days. She now has been well for weeks."

SCROFULOUS SORES. Mrs. A. L. Cory, Hadley, Crawford Co., Kansas, writes: "My son, aged fifteen years, was taken down last January with swellings on his right shoulder, left hip and knee. He lay helpless for five months, when great abscesses formed, four of which continued to discharge at the time he commenced using your 'Golden Medical Discovery' under your advice. Now, after having used four bottles of the 'Discovery,' he is almost well and walks three-fourths of a mile to school every day. A scrofulous sore on his arm, which ran constantly for two years, has healed completely under the influence of the remedy named."

Boils and Carbuncles.—J. Adams, Esq., Toledo, Ohio, writes: "I have used nine bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and the result is I am to-day free from boils and carbuncles for the first time in many years."

"Fever-Sores."—Mrs. A. H. Crawford, Linn Grove, Buena Vista Co., Iowa, writes: "I am the person who wrote to you two years ago for advice respecting fever-sores on my leg. I took six bottles of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and was cured."

Constipation and Ulcers.—Mrs. A. D. Johnson, Georgetown, Ky., writes: "The 'Golden Medical Discovery' relieved me at once. I had a very bad sore on the back of my left hand for five months, and it cured that, as well as constipation and indigestion, from which I was suffering very much."

Scrofulous Tumor and Sore Eyes.—Mrs. S. E. Graydon, of Greenwood, S. C., writes: "My daughter has been entirely cured of scrofulous sore eyes and a large tumor on her neck, by the use of your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I have great faith in all your medicines."

CONSUMPTION, WEAK LUNGS, SPITTING OF BLOOD.

Golden Medical Discovery cures Consumption (which is Scrofula of the Lungs), by its wonderful blood-purifying, invigorating and nutritive properties. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, Asthma, and kindred affections, it is a sovereign remedy. While it promptly cures the severest Coughs it strengthens the system and purifies the blood.

The nutritive properties of cod-liver oil are trifling when compared with those possessed by Golden Medical Discovery. It rapidly builds up the system, and increases the flesh and weight of those reduced below the usual standard of health by "wasting diseases."

LUNG DISEASE. A Wonderful Cure.—Daniel Fletcher, Esq., Gloucester, Mass., writes: "Nearly five years ago, I was taken sick with a disease regarding which the three physicians who attended me were unable to agree. One of the foremost physicians in Boston called it a tumor of the stomach, and treated me for that, nearly killing me with physic; another, a homœopathic physician, thought I had consumption. When taken sick, I weighed 157 pounds. I suffered from a heavy cough, night-sweats, kidney troubles, etc., and was reduced so rapidly that my physicians gave me up. They were unable to help me in the least. At that time I weighed but ninety pounds, and had not been able to lie down, but had to sit up in order to breathe. I had been confined to my room for six months, expecting to die. I was so bad at times that I could not allow any one to come into my room, as I could not talk; nor was I able to walk. I picked up one of your memorandum books on the floor of the hotel where I was boarding, and after reading it I began taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and the first bottle brought me around so that I could walk around the room all day. I soon began to build up, and gained so rapidly that it astonished me. I have taken no other medicine since then, and have used perhaps twenty bottles in all of this medicine. I stopped taking it in August, one year ago. I feel that it has saved my life. I now weigh about 160 pounds, and I think, and my friends with me, that this medicine saved my life. It certainly is worth its weight in gold, and I consider it a wonderful remedy from its effect in curing all my ailments."

SAVED HIS LIFE.

REDUCED TO A SKELETON. Consumption Cured.—W. J. Hartley, Vera Cruz, Ala., writes: "I met with an old friend of mine not long since, and he told me of the very low state of health he had been in and he applied to our best doctor, but gradually grew worse under his treatment; was reduced to a skeleton, had a fearful cough and was thought to have consumption. While in this low state he made a visit to see his relations, and while in a distant town, he purchased a bottle of medicine called, 'Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery,' and took it, and by the time it was used he was as well as he ever had been. When I saw him, he looked to be in the bloom of health. His statement caused a great deal of inquiry, as he is a man of high standing."

BLEEDING FROM LUNGS. Joseph F. McFarland, Athens, La., writes: "My wife had frequent bleeding from the lungs before she commenced using your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' She has not had any since its use. For some six months she has been feeling so well that she has discontinued it."

Consumption Cured.—J. Anthony Swink, Dongola, Ills., writes: "For five years I suffered very much from a terrible cough and debility. More than a year since I commenced to take your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and it has completely cured me. I thank you for the splendid health I have since enjoyed."

Golden Medical Discovery is Sold by Druggists. Price $1.00 per Bottle, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

HOME AND FARM.

—Don't compel your horses to eat musty hay. It will produce fatal lung trouble, and, in any event, heaves.

—In sweeping carpets use wet newspapers wrung nearly dry and torn to pieces. The paper collects the dust, but does not soil the carpet.

—A pail or tub of fresh, cold water, renewed several times in the course of twenty-four hours, will absorb all the evil odor of fresh paint in a day or two. The taste of the water after an hour will prove the thoroughness of its work.

—To clean silver: Wet a flannel cloth in kerosene oil, dip in dry whiting, and thoroughly rub the plated or silverware; throw into a dish of scalding soapsuds, wipe with a soft flannel, and polish with a chamois skin.

—Biscuit: One quart flour, one tablespoonful shortening, half a teaspoon salt and two of baking powder. Mix well together, add sufficient milk or water to form a very soft dough, as soft as can be rolled. Bake in a quick oven.

—In trimming a hedge something else should be considered as well as the matter of cutting off the extra growth. A proper shape should be given it. There is nothing so attractive or ornamental as a shapely, well-kept hedge, and it adds value to the farm.

—The Ohio Agricultural College states as the results of experiments there in soiling cattle that half the number of acres will feed the same amount of stock and keep them in better condition if the product be cut and placed before them. Nevertheless soiling is not everywhere profitable.

—Italian Rice Pudding: A teacupful of rice, the yelks of four eggs, the whites of three, beaten separately, two ounces pounded sugar, two ounces raisins, one-quarter pound suet, chopped very fine; flavoring of ratafia or vanilla; put these ingredients into a mold and boil an hour and a half. Serve with brandy or sweet sauce.—Chicago Herald.

—Sponge Jelly Roll: Four eggs, one cup and a half sugar, one tablespoonful baking-powder; beat the whites separately, and the sugar and the yolks together till very light, then add part of the whites, then a cup of flour, then beat good, then a little more flour, then the rest of the whites and stir easy; put in and bake. Spread and roll as quick as you can. It is very good.—Good Housekeeping.

—Ivory may be cleaned by scrubbing with a new soft tooth brush, soap and tepid water, then dry the ivory and brush well, dip the latter in alcohol and polish the ivory until it has regained its former sheen. If the water gives the ivory a yellowish tint dry the object in a heated place. If age has yellowed it, place the object under a bell-jar with a small vessel containing lime and muriatic acid, set the whole in the sunshine.

—If an apple-tree has a sound trunk and roots it is a pity, says the American Cultivator, to destroy it under most circumstances. It takes many years to get a young tree into bearing, and when it does bear it will not furnish nearly so much fruit as one fully grown. By grafting with the Northern Spy and liberally manuring an old apple tree may be made much more certainly productive than young trees of this variety, which are usually shy and tardy bearers.

LIMA BEAN CULTURE.

Directions for Obtaining a Large Crop of the Best Quality.

The Lima bean requires a warm, loose soil, well drained, and if the ground is ridged up well in the fall in five-foot beds, so much the better. Then, as soon as the soil will work nicely, clean out the furrows which have been left to carry off the water, with a plow, going up and back on each one. If the place is where celery was grown the year before, so much the better. Then, on the bottom, lay along, at a liberal thickness, some coarse cornstalks from the cow-yard. Then fold a furrow over them from each side. Then put a liberal sprinkling of good mixed barnyard manure on top. Then, with a garden rake, get on the opposite side and pull the best soft soil to the center. Let the sun into it a few days. Then sprinkle on some wood-ashes, chicken manure, or any thing of a good fertilizing character which practical men well know puts life and vim into the product; and when the soil is well warmed up, run two light, thin furrows with a hand cultivator, double rows, in the center of the bed, just over where the cornstalks are, about a foot deep and five feet apart. Drop the Lima bean seeds a foot apart, and cover one and one-half to two inches deep with very fine soil, raked over lightly.

After they are up, say five inches high, and just as they are breaking out to run, take a one-horse plow and plow a good furrow deep, away from each side of the double row. Then take some good flat pea-brush and push it down in each furrow, so that it leans a little to the center, and making the two rows go along together, inter-bind them, and when the rows are stuck through, turn the furrows back, plowing up against the sticks as close as the horse can walk; then press with the foot, having a hoe in hand, careful to handle the beans inside and give each a good chance.

One season of this treatment will convince the grower that the ten-foot bean pole, where a ladder or chair is needed to gather them, has gone out of date; and, beside, all the blossoms that hang in the shade are not so likely to fall off by the action of the sun, wind and rain, as those exposed to the weather by the pole system.—Joseph Cobb, in Country Gentleman.

MONUMENT FOR THE STOVE PIPES.

A Story of Pioneer Life in Early California Days.

Yes, there are many, a great many, good stories told by pioneers, some more excellent than true. A few years after our occupation of the state I was stationed in southern California, near Los Angeles, and one afternoon I strolled out to the scene of the Los Angeles massacre, in which a friend of mine, a young officer, and some enlisted men had been killed by the Mexicans some time before. While endeavoring to get a good idea of the position occupied by our troops I accidentally stirred up the earth with my shoe, and looking down I saw something glisten like gold in the sun. I picked it up and found it to be a human finger bone, and still on it the West Point class ring of my dead friend, marked with his name and the date of his graduation. I had visited his family in New England, so I wrote to them, inclosing their boy's ring and explaining how it had come into my possession. In the course of time I received a very grateful answer, requesting me, if I could identify the young man's remains, to have them disinterred and sent home. I found the remains and shipped them, nicely boxed, to the depot quartermaster, then in San Francisco, requesting him to hold them, as I would come along in a month myself and reship them. In due time I received another kind letter announcing the arrival of the remains, and the family seemed not able to thank me enough for what had been no trouble to me at all. Later on, having been granted a leave of absence, which I was spending in the east, I found myself in New York city and I received an invitation to visit the family again. So one Saturday morning I started and reached the lovely old homestead, which was beautifully situated in a New England town. I was hospitably received. On the following morning, Sunday, I was taken to the little cemetery and shown my friend's grave, over which had been erected a beautiful marble monument, inscribed with his name, military history, and the date and manner of his death. After a delightful visit I left, and my leave being up, I received orders to proceed to San Francisco to report for duty as depot quartermaster. In those days quartermasters when relieving each other, were very careful to see that all public property receipted for, even to the last bolt, was there in the store house before touching a pen to the receipts relieving the other from responsibility. The amount of property was great, and it took me four days to verify it according to the invoices.

On the invoices were some original boxes of stovepipes—that is to say, some which had never been opened. While going around with the quartermaster sergeant, on the afternoon of the fourth day, we came to the boxes of stovepipes. Being original packages, I did not order them to be opened, but satisfied myself by moving them slightly in order to see if they were of the proper weight. I had moved sixteen or seventeen of them, when one seemed to be unusually light, and I directed the sergeant to open it. He did so; raised the lid of the box slightly, and looked in. I noticed him quickly drop the lid and start back with a frightened look on his face, and I said:

"What's the matter, sergeant; isn't it all right?"

"No, sir; there's no stovepipes in there," he half gasped out.

I said: "What is there in the box?"

He said: "There's bones—human bones, sir. I saw a skull."

The truth then flashed across my mind. I had made a mistake and shipped the wrong stovepipe box to the old homestead in New England. I paid the government the price of one box of stovepipes, gave the old quartermaster a full receipt, had the remains nicely buried in San Francisco and until this moment I have never breathed it. But a lovely white marble monument in that pretty little New England town marks the last resting place of my box of stovepipes.—New York Times.

A Tale of Socrates.

Alcibiades, having cut off his dog's tail, met Socrates in his market place, and was rebuked for his folly.

"Tell me, O Alcibiades, why in the name of Jupiter didst thou chop off thy dog's tail?"

"Because it was too long, Socrates. Is not that reason enough?"

"The reason thou givest is no reason, fool. For if thou sayest truly, there is as much argument for cutting off the end of thy nose. Answer me again, Alcibiades, why didst thou chop off thy dog's tail?"

Again I say, O Socrates, the tail of the dog was too long. And now that thou hast chided me with words that sting like the fangs of scorpions, let me prove to thee, by the logic of the sacred academy, that thou art the greater fool."

"Make good thy boast, Alcibiades, or leave me in peace."

"Hear me then, O Socrates. Thou art the greater fool because thou hast not cut off thine own tales. By Jupiter, they are much too long."—Tid Bits.

A Glimpse Into the Future.

She—You don't mean it! What could she have been thinking of? How everybody must have stared at her!

He—Yes; she was the cynosure of all eyes. She was on the stage, you know, and her part called for a bonnet.

She—Oh, you great tease! How you frightened me! I didn't know but that that odious custom of wearing one's bonnet at the theatre was coming in fashion again.—Boston Transcript.

Adapting the Means to the End.

A certain German was very much blamed by the owner of a vicious dog which the former had shot.

"Why didn't you keep the dog off with the butt end of your gun instead of shooting him?" exclaimed the irate owner of the defunct canine.

"Ven dot tog comes at me tail first, den I pushes him away mit de butt end of my gun; but ven he comes at me mit his biting end first, den I shoots him mit ter biting end of dot gun."—Texas Siftings.

BEAUTIFY THE FARM.

Trees the Cheapest as Well as the Finest Ornaments in a Prairie Country.

After farmers have improved their places so as to render them productive they generally seek to beautify them. They erect buildings, on which they expend considerable money by way of ornamentation. They build ornamental fences about their house yards, and sometimes in front of their farms. They substitute well-made gates for bars in the openings in fences, and lay out walks through their grounds. The old-fashioned well-sweep gives place to a tasty pump, and a trough provided with a waste-pipe is substituted for the unsightly half-hogshead. Not unfrequently ornamental bridges are built over creeks and streams, and the ditches by the side of the road are properly sloped and kept free from sticks and stones. More attention is given to keeping all the fields and pastures in good order, so they will present an attractive appearance. In most cases paint is applied to buildings and fences with no sparing hand. The expenditure of time and money in "fixing up" the place so as to render it beautiful is often quite large, and if the results obtained are not the best possible they are after all very good, as taste and skill in decoration are only obtained by careful study and practice.

Creditable as are the attempts of farmers to beautify their places, it must after all be acknowledged that they could be directed in other ways to much better advantage. Trees are the cheapest as well as the most beautiful ornaments of country as well as of town places. The original cost of them is generally very small, and they are self-sustaining after they are once established in their new positions. A large sum is annually required to keep ornamental buildings, bridges and fences in repair. Paint wears off in a few years, wooden fences rot and wooden bridges fall. Even brick crumbles and most kinds of stone disintegrate. A well-constructed walk calls for constant care and labor to keep it in good condition. A road ditch requires attention to prevent it from becoming unsightly. But trees ordinarily repair the injuries that are done to them. They grow while other things decay. Their beauty increases while that of most objects diminishes. No protection is required for their trunks and branches. Their foliage presents fresh colors every spring far more beautiful and varied than any painter can apply. In most cases it changes in the fall to be in harmony with the other objects that comprise the landscape. That of evergreens does not change, as it is one of which the eye never tires. The beautiful green needles of the pine, fir, spruce and hemlock stand out 'mid the sunshine of June, the darkness of December and the gloom of March. There is no occasion for changing the perfection of beauty.

Deciduous trees give a charm to places even when their branches are denuded of foliage. Each variety has some distinctive characteristic which heightens the beauty of others both by co-operation and by contrast. The oak, ash, hickory and walnut are always grand and stately, while the elm, birch and willow are always graceful. Trees form the most lasting attractions of any place. They are the delight of childhood, the joy of middle life and the solace of old age. The memory of them is carried to distant lands, and it is always a pleasant one. A tree is beautiful in every stage of its growth, and it constantly grows in beauty from the time the seed-sprout appears above ground till its branches are stretched over roods of land. The most charming places in city or country are those that are beautified by trees. The roads on which people most delight to ride are those that are bordered by stately trees. The most beautiful landscape is the one that affords a view of the finest trees. A solitary tree serves to break the monotony of a prairie farm. A grove on it is what a fine picture is to a room. A fine shelter belt is like an ornamental border to a vegetable garden. Trees attract song-birds, which furnish constant music during the summer months. The greater variety of trees on a place, the greater will be the variety of birds that will seek them for the purpose of building nests and rearing their young.

The best way to fit up a place with a view of selling it at a large price is to set out beautiful trees in suitable places. Trees are wanted by every would-be purchaser. It is impossible to erect or ornament buildings that will please the taste or satisfy the wants of all persons. Every person has his own ideas about a house, barn and other farm buildings. If they buy a farm they are quite likely, if they have the means, to make alterations in all the buildings among the first things they do. They will remove partitions and erect new ones. They will stop up some of the doors, and put in new windows. They may change the construction of the barn, tear down the pig-pen, and move the granary; but there are some things they will not disturb or wish to change. They will leave the row of elms along the roadside, the shelter belt of Norway spruces, the great sycamore that shades the spring, the cluster of maples in the sheep pasture, the flowering hawthorn by the path to the well and the group of firs in the front yard. These were attractions that drew them to the place, and caused them to pay a goodly price for it. They do not lose their charms like other things, but hold them while they become more charming every season.—Chicago Times.

EDITOR GRADY AT HOME.

What a Reporter Saw In and About the Sanctum.

In May last a Memphis reporter, who was swinging around the southern circuit in search of a newspaper that could not exist without his services, chanced to visit Atlanta and called upon Mr. Grady.

He says: "It was not exactly a friendly call, as Mr. Grady had not the honor of my acquaintance. My mission was one of business exclusively, and the social amenities of journalism were lost sight of in the hope of getting a job at almost anything a week. In front of The Constitution building I saw three reporters standing and gazing reverentially up at the third floor corner window. I knew them to be reporters by their fashionable attire and intellectual foreheads. I asked them in what part of the building Mr. Grady might be found. They simply pointed with jeweled forefingers in the direction they were looking, and resumed their orisons. The elevator boy was startled when told that I wished to be set down on Mr. Grady's floor. He evidently considered me rash. At the second floor we took on several compositors. I knew they were compositors, because they were careless in raiment and bore themselves as men who carry the earth in a typestick.

"'Rather it was you than me,' he replied, with a sympathy that was a little puzzling to me then. It didn't puzzle me ten minutes later.

"On reaching the third floor the elevator boy pointed me silently down a spacious hall lined with rare plants and adorned here and there with costly works of art in bronze and marble. At the further end was a massive door of carved oak. In the center of the middle panel was a round hole about the size of a half dollar and just below this a silver bell pull. I gave the knob a twist and in a moment a mellow tenor voice was heard through the opening asking who was there. I told my name and business.

"'Beg pardon for standing you off,' said the owner of the voice, opening the door. 'I thought you were a congressman; we're so pestered with 'em here.'

"I entered a luxuriously appointed anteroom and confronted a handsome young man wearing a priceless diamond ring and a delicate bang.

"'Wait here until I seek the Presence,' he said, solemnly, and disappeared through an inner door.

"By this time nerve was as scarce about my person as the price of board.

"Presently the handsome young man returned and said, 'He will see you.'

"I followed him and found myself in Mr. Grady's audience chamber. It was furnished with oriental splendor. There were four persons in the room—the governor of the state, a United States senator, a stenographer and the man I was seeking. The great journalist was seated on a rich divan, dictating to the stenographer, while the others hung breathlessly upon his words. I took him to be about 40 years old. He is thickset and has the appearance of a man whose stomach never gets left, if he knows it. His head is round and covered with a short growth of black hair, his face sallow, smooth shaven and lighted by a pair of cold, piercing black eyes. His voice is well modulated, but penetrating. It went through me like a knitting needle and stuck in the wall beyond.

"'Tell him,' he said to the shorthand man, 'I have my eye upon you, and if Gordon does not get a majority of the delegation from your county—Well, sir,' suddenly discovering me, 'what do you want?'

"'I thought Uncle Remus was here,' I stammered out. Nothing else occurred to me. I was paralyzed.

"'You'll find him down at Miss Sally's,' replied Mr. Grady, and somehow in about a minute I found myself on the pavement outside.

"Everybody in Atlanta seems to regard Mr. Grady as the greatest product of Georgia, and the awful reverence with which he is treated is not confined to the employes of The Constitution. He is the king bee in that jug town and beyond all compare is the most overpowering journalistic magnate I ever encountered."—Memphis Avalanche.

Why Were the Witnesses Not Produced?

In a will case before a court and a rustic jury, Jere Black appeared as counsel for the youngest of three sisters, and sought to break the will on the ground that the two elder sisters had, with the assistance of his learned brother, the counsel on the other side, cajoled and coerced the dead father during his dying hours into signing a will giving them all his property and leaving the youngest daughter out in the cold. Black, who was young then, made a great speech to the jury, in which "King Lear" very naturally appeared.

"Goneril was at that bedside, gentlemen of the jury," he exclaimed. "Regan was there. But where was Cordelia?"

The jury remained out for some time. At last they came in, but the foreman reported that they could not agree. All of them except one man were in favor of the youngest sister, but the one man was not satisfied and could not be satisfied about what he thought a flaw in the evidence.

"What is it?" asked the court of the obstinate juror.

"Why, your honor," said the fellow, "if Mr. Goneril and Mr. Regan were present, as that lawyer said, why didn't he put them in the witness box?"—Philadelphia Record

A Hopeless Case.

In a certain city in Connecticut there lived a very small boy with a liberal share of small "original sins." It is charged that one day he was playing in front of the house and overheard some street gamin using slang expressions profusely. "Mamma, mamma, what's a gone sucker?" Now, mamma did not in the least know, but as her son had been disobeying her that morning she took the advantage of the opportunity to point a good moral. "A gone sucker, my son? Why, it means a naughty little boy who doesn't mind his mother." That night, as Johnnie was saying his prayers, the full measure of his sin seemed to occur to him with awful significance, and stopping short the usual petition he cried out in the abandonment of his remorse, "O Lord, I'm a gone sucker!"—Harper's Monthly.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—There are three thousand men employed in drift-mining in California, and the product is $5,000,000 a year.

—Experiments tried with a new electrical device for use in feeding sheets of paper to printing presses prove quite successful. It is automatic, and notice of any trouble is signalled at once by ringing a bell.

—During the past ten years the Baldwin locomotive works have made over four thousand locomotives, of which they have exported about nine hundred. Of these, fully seven hundred have gone to South America. They not only furnish engines to South America, but have supplanted English locomotives in New Zealand. They have sent many to Australia and to New South Wales.—Philadelphia Press.

—Prof. J. Emerick, of William and Mary College, has been studying a meteroite which fell in that neighborhood a year ago, weighing about two hundred tons. Its composition was found to be chromium, nickel, aluminum, copper, magnesium, tin, and other metals and metalloids. It contained eighty-seven per cent. of iron in a metallic state. Its specific gravity was 7.412.

—Railroads are now giving preference to "sawed" ties when obtainable. They can be transported and handled at less expense, and make a smoother track, with less labor and less time. Sawed ties can be made from timber that can not be utilized for other purposes. This branch of industry is proving profitable, as the demand for railroad ties is increasing and the prices are advancing.—Chicago Tribune.

—While agreeing in general with the theory that comets have their origin beyond the limits of the solar system, Prof. Daniel Kirkwood finds proof that some of those of short period are minor planets, whose orbits in the asteroid zone have been changed through the perturbing influence of the large planets. The third comet of 1884, for instance, seems to have been drawn from the Asteroids by Jupiter in May, 1875.—Boston Budget.

—A new kind of nail, for attaching mouldings and other light lumber, which leaves no nail holes, is made with a point at each end, and with an outwardly-projecting head or shoulder midway between the points. The nail is first driven into the wood by means of a punch, which straddles the protruding point and bears on the head. When enough have been driven in the moulding is placed over the nails and driven down.—Boston Bulletin.

—A well-known firm of Berlin engineers is now making a device for signaling the passage of a train by means of mercury. The deflection of one rail of the line caused by the passing of a train is caused to press upon the elastic diaphragm of a vessel fixed under the rail, and containing mercury. The mercury is forced up a side tube so as to complete an electrical circuit and ring a bell or work some other indicator.

"Yes, Johnny, what have I got?" "You've got to pay pa back his $6 when he asks for them, or he will shoot the top of your head off."—Texas Siftings.

—A local correspondent vouches for the truth of the following: Two ladies called at a house on Main street. After two rings at the bell, a dear little girl appeared and inspected the visitors with undisguised interest. "Ah, my dear," said one lady, "will you please tell your mother that Mrs. —— and Miss —— are here, and would like to see her?" The little dear said she would, and went up stairs. After a while she returned, sat down and silently watched the two strangers. "Well," said one at length, 'and what did mamma say, little one?" 'She said, 'O, dear! I don't want to, but I s'pose I must.'"—Buffalo Courier.

FOUL IN THE FOOT.

Among the minor things to be looked after by cattle-breeders in fall and spring is the condition of the feet of their stock. Cattle can not be kept in the stable all the time, as they need exercise to keep them in good health. Notwithstanding all the care possible, they will get into the mud, more or less, and this is better for them than to have their feet always dry, if the feet are not allowed to become sore. There will be pellets or rolls of mud between the hoofs, which, if allowed to remain, eventually irritate the thin skin there, and produce what is called "foul in the foot." This does not often occur, it is true, but there is always a possibility that it may happen. If the cattle are not allowed considerable daily exercise, the hoofs are liable to grow long and make the animal lame. Bulls which, of necessity, are kept in the stable all the time, are often troubled in this way, and their feet have to be trimmed occasionally, which is a rather hard job. Cattle which run a portion of each day in a yard or lane, where the soil is gravelly or stony, are never troubled in this way. During muddy weather, however, they sometimes get sore feet, on account of continued irritation, caused by hard, foreign substances between the hoofs.

"Fouls," or foul in the foot, is an ulcerous inflammation of the delicate skin and flesh between the claws of the hoof, and is communicable by contact of the pus or matter of a sore foot with the clean skin of a healthy foot, yielding readily to remedial measure at the outset, but difficult to cure after it becomes deep-seated and spreads throughout the adjacent tissues. There are numerous remedies in general use, some of them uselessly painful and caustic. All that is really needed is to clean the affected surfaces from pus and decayed animal tissues, and then apply a remedy which will destroy any germs of decay that may be left, and at the same time lubricate and heal the tender parts. Too much or too severe caustic only adds to the irritation, preventing rapid healing, and adding to the animal's suffering. If the feet are watched, as they should be, and the hard lumps of mud are removed before the feet become sore, no remedy is needed, as there will be no disease. The "ounce of prevention" is much the cheaper.

The worst part of the business is to clean the affected foot. The animal naturally objects to having it touched, and the cleaning, if thorough, as it must be, is very painful. Consequently, it is necessary to secure the animal in some way, so that it can not struggle. Some tie a rope to the leg, the foot of which is affected, while the animal is tied in its stall, and draw the foot up and back, tying the rope to some convenient timber or stud. This will do if the animal will stand still, but it is sure not to do this, and there is much difficulty in working at the foot, and there is great danger of injury resulting from the struggles of the animal. The better way is to throw the animal flat on the ground, and then securely fasten his feet, so that he can not struggle. Any one who has ever seen a horse thrown by the Rarey or a similar method, can easily manage to "cast" an animal without injuring it. Then, with a spattula of wood, or a dull butcher's knife, the diseased foot can be scraped clean without causing the blood to flow, and then the foot can be well washed with warm water. The other feet should also be cleaned and washed.

As soon as dry, a caustic ointment should be spread all over the diseased surfaces. Any caustic, like butter of antimony, or diluted sulphuric acid, will be effectual, but these are productive of much pain, and are liable to be washed or rubbed off in a short time. Blue vitriol, pulverized to an almost impalpable powder, and mixed thoroughly with an equal weight of lard, makes an ointment which does not wash or rub off readily, is not severe, and is entirely effectual. In fact for foul in the foot in cattle and foot-rot in sheep, we think there is no remedy equal to this for effectiveness, cheapness, and ease of application. Usually, one application completes the cure, and it does always if the cleansing has been perfect. Otherwise a second application may be needed in four or five days.—National Live-Stock Journal.

A Warning for Tea-Topers.

A friend who for many years was a terrible sufferer from periodical attacks of nervous headache, was telling me recently that he had discovered the cause of his trouble to be the use of tea. Since he had stopped drinking it, some months ago, his general health had much improved, and there had been no symptoms during that time of a return of the old disorder. Knowing that one man's food is another man's poison, I concluded that what my friend found hurtful was still a blessing to the remainder of mankind, but yesterday I met another acquaintance who told me the same story of himself. No reformed drunkard is more zealous in urging his comrades to abandon the cup than is this gentleman in depicting to his friends the misery and pain that are caused by China's enervating beverage. The physical and mental inferiority of the Chinese to European races is entirely owing, he urges, to their immoderate use of tea, and if the Caucasians are to maintain their present supremacy in the world they will have to smash the tea-pot—Chicago Journal.

RUSSIAN DETECTIVES.

How Two of Them Scoured America for the Exiled Prince Dolgorouki.

A recent dispatch from the Indian Territory stated that a quiet, refined, cultured gentleman, who has taken up his residence there, proves to be Prince Dolgorouki, brother of the Princess Dolgorouki, morganatic wife of the late Czar, who had been exiled to Siberia for Nihilistic sentiments. While in exile he was condemned to work in deep mines that prove the death of so many of the unhappy exiles. He availed himself of his skill as an engraver and cut a passport on stone, which he subsequently printed, and by means of this he made his escape from the mines and from Siberia. After living in China he went to South America, and thence to California. He finally made his way to the Indian Territory, where he has felt safe enough to reveal his identity. The publication of this dispatch recalled to a gentleman who read it a conversation he had about two years ago with a Pole named Tolsti in Philadelphia, and led him to tell the story to a reporter. Tolsti was himself an exile from Siberia, where he had felt the weight of Russian severity, and bore upon his person the marks of the treatment the officials mete out to prisoners. He was engaged at the time the gentleman met him in a mercantile pursuit that caused him to travel from one part of the country to another. After telling how he escaped, he said, although he knew he was safe now, being in a free country, yet he was always on the alert for any signs of detectives, and always paid close attention to any Russians with whom he came in contact. One night he took a sleeper on the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago railroad, bound from Chicago to New York. After the cars were well under way, and the passengers were getting into their berths for the night, he was considerably agitated at hearing two men in adjoining berths talking to each other in Russian. Peering over the top of the partition he saw that one was leaning over the edge of an upper berth talking to his companion below. As they had no reason to suppose anybody within hearing distance was acquainted with the Russian language, they spoke in an ordinary tone of voice. Tolsti's heart was in his mouth, for he soon discovered they were detectives. He feared they were on his track. His mind was soon at rest on that score, as he found they had been in search of some other escaped exile, and he at once decided to follow the detectives, as they were not following him.

He listened intently as they talked. They had traced an exile, and like bloodhounds had taken his trail from the starting point, followed it to the sea, and sailing down the Kamschatka Sea had entered China, where they had found out all about his life there. They had then followed the trail to South America, and then gone to California. The rehearsal of the route was interspersed with computations of expense, and it was evident the two were getting together in their minds the rough frame work of a report to their chief. As Tolsti, when the cars reached Jersey City, had not discovered whom the detectives had been after, nor had they reached the end of the story, he concluded to follow them. They went to the most secluded places they could find, taking up their quarters in a Cherry street boarding hotel. Tolsti also took rooms there, and made it a point to take his meals with them. They were entirely unsuspicious of Tolsti, who spoke English with remarkable purity, and so their talk, which was really a discussion, proceeded with entire freedom. The chief insisted that the object of their journey had been accomplished, while his companion interjected doubts occasionally, which, however, as promptly yielded to the more emphatic expressions of the leader. They had stayed for some time in California, but at last struck the trail of their man, and had followed him until they came to a place on the Central Pacific railroad among the mountains, where there had been an accident and a man had been killed. Upon his person had been found some papers that seemed to the detectives to be what they wanted, and the elder, after purchasing them of the coroner, was satisfied they had run their man to earth, and that the world had closed over him. And yet the detectives had missed the object of their search after all. They took the next Red Star steamer that left the port, but the object of their long hunt now turns up alive and well in the Indian Territory. For it was Dolgorouki they were after. This name came up in their talk at frequent intervals, but it was always coupled with the name of the Princess, and Tolsti was puzzled, as he had heard of the Prince and knew he was confined in Siberia, but had not heard of his escape. As near as he could gather from their talk, their object was to secure some paper, either in possession of the Prince, or to procure his signature to some document. When they reported to their chief at St. Petersburg they undoubtedly satisfied him that Prince Dolgorouki was dead and buried in an obscure grave in the Rocky mountains, and he will read of Dolgorouki's reappearance in the Indian Territory with great surprise.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

The records show thirty-seven new operas produced in Italy, twenty-eight in Germany, a dozen or so in France and half a dozen or less in England. By the way, who owns the ulster?

M. E. Gilmore departed for the Lower Country on Thursday.

Pat Keys is working a rich ledge in the White Hill district.

An effort is being made to provide a bell for the new M. E. church at this place.

Better grounds for a racetrack could not be had than those offered by Mr. Robinson.

The band boys' ball next Friday is sure to be a success. See their ad. in another column.

It is reported that the Candelaria B. B. C. will compete for the purse at Independence on the Fourth.

J. A. Lank returned home on Wednesday from a visit to the lower country. He has been in poor health.

The rates on the Greenly toll road to Deep Springs were fixed by the Board of Supervisors the same as last year.

Work is to be commenced on the new pavilion soon. It is expected to be in condition to hold the Fourth of July ball in it.

Mr. H. H. Russell, of Benton, and Mr. W. J. Beren, of San Francisco, were at Independence this week on mining business.

Messrs. Shepherd and Holbert have gone to the lower country with a band of horses and mules. They expect to be gone about three weeks.

Dr. Woodin, as County Physician, makes regular trips to the Hospital at Lone Pine. He intends opening an office and having regular office hours at that place.

Excursion trains will be run on the Fourth to Independence. Arrangements are being made to make this the grandest affair of the kind ever held in the valley.

Mr. W. Hampton, of Davisville, arrived at Independence on Wednesday. He will make this place his home, being engaged as clerk in the store of A. W. Eibeshutz.

A purse of $50 will be run for here on the Fourth. Distance, 100 yards, winner to take purse and entrance money. Entries to close July 1st with the Secretary.

A prize of $100 will be given for the best baseball nine at Independence on July 4th. Clubs who intend competing will please notify the Secretary, B. Rhine, at an early date.

Doctor George, of Bishop Creek, and Mr. C. Parsons, of Round Valley, were at Independence last Saturday on business connected with the new Masonic Lodge at Bishop Creek.

An order has been made requiring the County Officers to furnish a schedule at each meeting of the Board of Supervisors of the amount of supplies needed for the ensuing quarter.

Rev. J. M. De La Matyr has returned from his trip to Reno. Services will from henceforth be held regularly at the Methodist Church, at Independence, at 11 o'clock A. M. Sunday-school at 11:45. All are cordially invited to attend.

Barna Peeler, of Bishop Creek, had a leg badly fractured on Wednesday. He was driving some cattle when his horse fell on him. The same leg was broken before and had but just got well. Deputy Clerk Peeler went up to visit his father on Thursday.

Mr. E. Robinson will donate five acres of land near town for a site upon which to erect a pavilion for the Fair and also sufficient ground for a racetrack and stables. Mr. Rhine will furnish all the pipe needed to put water upon the grounds. This is by all means the best selection that could be made.

Having in our official capacity as members of the Plymouth, Pa., Hospital Committee, been asked to test and prove the offective of many different articles to be used as disinfectants in sick-rooms and as preventives of infectious fevers, report that Darbys Prophylactic Fluid has been thoroughly tested during the recent Typhoid epidemic in this place. It proved most efficacious in staying the spread of the Fever.

F. H. Armstrong, S. M. Davenport, J. A. Opp, O. M. Lance, Thos. Kerr, James Lee, Jr.

Messrs. Reed, Benoit and StJacques, of Yolo county, arrived at Independence last week. They are now looking around with a view to buy improved land. Mr. Reed is an old resident of Yolo county; he came from Tennessee, crossing the plains in the early days. Few people have done more to populate the State than Mr. and Mrs. Reed; they are now hale and hearty, the parents of sixteen children, all of whom lived to be men and women. The descendents of this vigorous couple now number over ninety persons. Mr. Reed says he is highly pleased with Owens Valley; we hope the thrifty stock may be established among us.

The Supervisors at their recent meeting granted the petition for an election on the formation of an irrigation district. The election is ordered to be held on the 2nd day of July. The ditch for the proposed district has been fully surveyed and will carry water to irrigate about forty-five thousand acres of land. Much of this tract is as well suited to orchard and vineyard, and also to general farming, as any land in the State. The town of Independence is near the middle of the proposed district from north to south, but just outside the line of the district on the west. All of the land in the district slopes gently to the east and will be very easy to irrigate; it will be not less easy to clear and prepare for cultivation.

A GROSS SWINDLE.

Every day or two other victims of Martin, the San Francisco land swindler, are heard from. A late case is that of a party in the State of New York, who wrote to the Land Office at Independence stating that he had paid to Martin quite a sum of money for a tract of land in Owens Valley. The numbers of the tract were given and on referring to the records the Recorder found that other parties had been granted United States patents for the land years ago. If prosecuted for this one crime alone Martin would certainly go to State Prison. Another party arrived at Independence last Monday to settle upon land which Martin had been paid for locating. This party had been assured that a canal was already built from which the land could be irrigated. He found that the land is above any canal built or projected, and that Martin had most grossly swindled him. A poor old minister in Nebraska was heard from a few days ago; he wrote that he had paid Martin $350 in full confidence that he had secured a home, where he expected soon to go, as he is now too old to continue in the active duties of his profession. He is but one more of the victims of this unscupulous swindler. No person should come to Owens Valley on the representations of Martin; all who have land locations made for them by Martin should write to Independence before coming here, give the numbers of the locations alleged to have been made, and ascertain if the land is fit for immediate settlement. If this is done bitter disappointment and serious loss may be averted. It is amazing that such a gross fraud as the "International Immigrant Union, which is only an alias for W. H. Martin, could go on so long in a career of swindling and no effort be made to put a stop to it.

A Business Proposition.

When the vote on the formation of our new irrigation district shall be taken, and the district formed, as it certainly will be, the next object will be to sell the bonds and get money to build the canal. Next in importance to this great improvement will be the completion of rail communication with Los Angeles. There need be very little doubt that a good share of the irrigation bonds could be placed in Los Angeles; the security will be gilt-edged and the investment a good one. In connection with an effort to place some of the bonds in Los Angeles, a display should be made there of all the productions of Inyo county, the minerals as well as the products of the farm, the orchard and vineyard. With such a display, and a clear statement of the amount of land available for settlement, the abundance of water supply, the pleasant climate, the excellent market for all kinds of products, in short, all the excellent inducements the country offers for settlement and investment of money, a railway would speedily be built and a tide of prosperity set in such as few can now atall anticipate.

Resolutions of Sympathy.

WHEREAS, It has pleased and all-wise and Divine Providence to take from our midst our beloved Brother, Abraham Parker, and

WHEREAS, we recognized in him a true and tried Odd Fellow, who scrupulously adhered to and practiced the divine principles of friedds hip, love and truth,

Resolved, That we sincerely mourn the loss of our dear Brother, and look forward with fond hope to the time when we may meet him in the Grand Lodge on high, not made with hands, where death nor sorrow cannot enter.

That we tender our sincere sympathies and condolence to his bereaved friends and relatives, and recommend that the charter and regalia of this Lodge be draped in mourning for thirty days.

JOHN C. EVANS, SPRINGFIELD, MO., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take as much labor out of men as this Washer takes of the women, and save as much money as it does and cost as more, I could sell one at every house, if they had to take the fashers from under their wife and babies to pay for it."

JOHN R. DODGE, JR., jeweler, NORMAL, ILL., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. Let it be the best machine ever invented by man. Yet. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. Yet. If you run short, you can not buy ours for $100."

I will ship a sample to those desiring an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best washer in the world for saving labor, clothes and soap. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.

The "Bolony Retina"—Advice to His Son on How to Run a Newspaper.

MY DEAR SON—Your first letter written since you started your paper at New Bolony was received yesterday. We felt glad to hear that you were located in a business for yourself, and it made me feel proud to get a copy of the paper which you call The Retina. I do not know why you call it The Retina. Still The Bolony Retina sounds kind of fulsome and didactic.

Retina, I always supposed, was kind of a medical term, and I would be just fool enough if I started a paper to call it The Sciatica or The Polypus at Work. It's wonderful how people run to new names these days, and a plain man with a common school education has to go groping along through the world the best he can. I presume that, with your thorough and florid education, such a word as Retina don't stump you for a minute, but with me it's different. I am a rough, hard working man and always been busy all my life. One of the neighbors asked me night before last why I hadn't joined the Knights of Labor, and I told him that I'd always been too busy.

It's a fact, too. I've always been so constantly employed that I couldn't belong to a labor organization and give it the attention it ought to have.

I like the tone of your editorial piece, on the inside of your paper, which is entitled, "Salutatory." I like it where it goes on to say as follows:

"We shall strive, in season and out of season, to advocate the resources and liabilities of New Bolony as a health resort and county seat. Our voice will ever be heard in clarion tones, putting its shoulder to the wheel of progress and tramping on oppression with both feet.

"We shall send The Retina to every quarter of the globe, so that New Bolony, with its wealth of picturesque valley, hill and dale, together with its new court house and health giving atmosphere, will be known of wherever the English language is spoke.

"It is true that the editor of this paper has just emerged from college, and is still young; but he has had some experience in writing for a college paper, and he knows what the needs and the wants of the people are. He is aware that the class of readers who will peruse The Retina will not be so refined or cultivated, perhaps, as his college readers were; but he will try to make himself understood, and we think we will be successful.

"We shall constantly improve The Retina, as growing business and patronage may warrant, so that in a few years our readers will look back on this first copy with ill-concealed mirth. We are already figuring on a dark blue job press and a rubber door mat for the office, bearing the legend 'Welcome' in large gothic extended letters.

"We shall espouse the cause of no party or faction for the present, preferring to remain neutral for the time being, hopping on to the erroneous, ever and anon, however, as circumstances may arise which will seem to call on us for a word of reproof, admonition or encouragement. We shall not make any boasts or fill the air with bombast at this time, but when hydra headed wrong emerges from its hole the casual observer will see us knock seventeen distinct varieties of tar out of said hydra headed wrong, and those who carefully observe our course while conducting The Retina will notice that there are no flies on it.

"We have quite a number of our best essays and orations prepared while we were attending school and college, which will appear from time to time in these columns. They are carefully and exhaustively written, and entirely cover the ground. Among these we may name the following titles:

"The American Indian—His Glorious Past and Opaque Future.
"The Care and Discipline of Children from an Unpartisan Standpoint.
"The Disagreeable Results of Crime—Necessity for Exercise Among the Laboring Classes.
"Demosthenes as an Off Hand Speaker.
"How to Reclaim Giddy Parents—Where is Your Parent To-Night?
"Criticisms on the Present Imperfect Plan of Salvation.
"Duty of Wives—What Constitutes a Good Wife.
"George Washington and the Misery He Entailed Upon the Youth of America by Telling the Truth and Afterward Becoming the Father of His Country.

"All these essays are well written, and would be highly ornamental to any first class magazine in the land, but we are here to give satisfaction in our new field, and the best we have ever written is none too good for the people of New Bolony. We aim to please.

"With regard to prohibition, we shall be outspoken at all times. As for ourself we can use prohibition or we can let it alone. For the present we prefer to touch not, taste not, handle not the unclean thing. We favor a high license with low retail prices. This gradually busts up the dealer and finally wipes this curse from the face of the earth with the besom of statutory wrath. Besoms of statutory wrath carefully printed at this office on short notice.

"In closing we will state that The Retina starts out with a liberal patronage and has come to stay. We use this last term with the permission of the man who made it.

"We expect our new navy blue jobber in a few weeks, and little boys in town who wish to see how a newspaper is made, and who would like to contribute a thumb or two out of their little collection, may come and monkey with the new press at any time. We will return their thumbs to them at the end of the week."

I like the tone of this piece as a general thing, though I am sorry to hear you allude to your liberal patronage and by the same mail get a request for more funds. I will send you what money I can spare, hoping that you will soon get on your feet again.

I suppose you will be running for congress the next thing, and then you will forget all about your old father, and borrow money of people who haven't felt near the interest in you that I have.

Send the paper for one year and charge me with the subscription price. You may also put a piece in your paper stating as follows:

FOR SALE.

Owing to ill health I will sell at my residence in town 29, range 18, west, according to government survey, one crushed raspberry colored cow, aged 6 years. She is a good milkster, and is not afraid of the cars—or anything else. She is a cow of undaunted courage and gives milk frequently. To a man who does not fear death in any form she would be a great boon. She is very much attached to her home at present, by means of a trace chain, but she will be sold to any one who will agree to treat her right. She is one-fourth shorthorn and three-fourths hyena. Purchaser need not be identified. I will also throw in a double barrel shotgun which goes with her. In May she generally goes away somewhere for a week or two and returns with a tall, red calf, with long, wabbly legs. Her name is Rose, and I would prefer to sell her to a non resident.

You may keep this notice in your paper till you sell the cow. We are all pretty well, and hope your paper will be self-sustaining.

If I had four or five boys all engaged in running newspapers that had liberal patronage I don't believe I'd have money enough to pay my poll tax. But I must now close by saying so-long, as the feller says. Your father.—Bill Nye in Chicago News.

WONDERFUL TOWERS.

Some of the Most Remarkable Structures of the Kind in the World.

The ancient city of Pisa, Italy, is famous for its lofty and magnificent structures, some of which have very interesting stories. None of them, however, is so wonderful as the celebrated leaning tower. This building was commenced in 1174 by a Pisan architect, named Bonanna, by William of Innspruck. It is of cylindrical form, one hundred and seventy-nine feet high, fifty feet in diameter, and leans twelve feet nine inches from the perpendicular. It consists of eight stories, each of which has an outside gallery projecting from it. From the summit, which is reached by several hundred steps, a beautiful and extensive view may be had of the surrounding country. The misconstruction was discovered before the tower was finished, and the upper tiers were so shaped as to partly counteract the arcutation. At the top of the tower seven immense bells were so placed, as by their weight, to counterbalance the leaning of the tower.

The highest tower in the world is at Cremona, in Northern Italy; it is three hundred and ninety-six feet high. It was begun in 1223, and the bells which are in it were cast in 1578. An astronomical clock, made in the year 1594, is placed in the third story.

The Florentine campanile was commenced in 1334, by Giotto, the great painter, architect and sculptor. He commenced the erection of the tower with the determination to surpass all the ancient structures of this kind, both in height and in richness of design. But Giotto, having died in 1336, the tower was completed by Taddeo Gaddi. Its height is two hundred and seventy-six feet, and it is divided into four tiers. It is of equal dimensions from bottom to top, and is built on the Italian Gothic style. On the basement floor there are two rows of tablets in relief; they are the work of Giotto. There are also many beautiful statues on the upper tier. It was the original design of Giotto to have a spire surmount the present tower, and the columns which were to support it may still be seen on the top of the building.

The famous tower known as Giralda, is situated at Seville, Spain. This tower when originally built by Phillip Guevara, the Moor, was only two hundred and fifty feet high. But in 1568 a magnificent belfry one hundred feet high was added, and it is now the second highest in the world.

The campanile was called Giralda, because of the brazen weathercock in its top story. Although the figure weighs a ton and a half, it is easily turned by the wind. It is said that a very fine campanile was situated at Salisbury, England. It is supposed to have been two hundred feet high, and was probably destroyed by Sir Thomas Wyatt, the younger, while leading an insurrectionary mob.—Louisville (Ky.) Outlook.

Some Mitigating Circumstances.

"See here, Jones, I want to talk to you a moment," said an Austin philanthropist; "don't you know you are not doing your duty by your children in not sending them to school? That's not the way a fond father should treat his children."

"Well, now, I don't know about that," replied Jones. "I don't believe you fully realize what you are talking about. Now, I have a brother whose oldest son was sent up for two years for horse-stealing, and the judge, in sentencing him, said that his ignorance and lack of early education were strong mitigating circumstances in the case; and instead of making the sentence ten years, which he would have done had the boy never received any education, he would only make it two. Now, do you suppose I am going to rob my boys of those mitigating circumstances that have already been such a bonanza in the family? No, sir; before I do, I hope my right arm will cleave to the roof of my mouth!"—Texas Siftings.

Toothsome Boiled Bread.

A writer in a housekeeping journal affirms that bread can be boiled instead of baking it and with far less heat of the range. The new method consists mainly in steaming the dough instead of cooking it in the oven. It is claimed that this is a great invention, as it saves the time and experience necessary to get the oven to the right heat for baking, which has always proved the great obstacle to baking at home. The utensils required are simply these: First a tin mould, or camp-kettle, in which the dough is placed after it has been mixed with the usual ingredients—water, yeast, sugar and salt—and secondly, a larger tin saucepan, into which the mould fits. The water in the outer saucepan is allowed to boil around the tin mould for two or three hours, the lids of both utensils being kept closely down and at the end of that time the loaf may be turned out. It will be found firm, solid and palatable, with all the qualities of good bread.—N. Y. World.

—The Presbyterian General Assembly, of England, have forwarded a petition to Queen Victoria praying for protection to their mission work in the New Hebrides. It is pointed out that the missionaries have been successful in civilizing a large portion of the people of the New Hebrides. Nearly £180,000 has been expended in carrying on the work, in which sixteen missionaries and over one hundred native teachers and evangelists are engaged. The mission has made 9,000 converts to Christianity while 50,000 natives had been more or less civilized.

—How inconsistent most persons are! You shoot off a pun, a brand-new one possibly, and you are threatened with instant annihilation, but the same man who thus objects will spend a dollar and a half and three hours at the theater listening to the most archaic of word-twisting, laugh uproariously at every pun, and next day retail all he can remember to his friends and acquaintances. As Colonel Ingersoll once remarked, there's something wrong somewhere.—Philadelphia Press.

THE HUMAN HAND.

A Nice Little Lecture for Boys and Girls and Some Old Folks, Too.

Young people have a great deal of trouble with their hands, and commit many faults with them. When they go upon the platform to speak a piece, they know not what to do with those troublesome and superfluous appendages, unless some good teacher of elocution has told them; and then it is hard to obey his injunction to "let them alone."

Just to let them hang quietly and naturally by the side most of the time, is very difficult for a tyro. A boy's impulse is to get hold of his coat, fumble with his watch-chain, or make gestures which add no force to his words. An old teacher of elocution has given this excellent rule: "When your hands have nothing to do, do nothing with them; let them hang."

Some boys, yes, and some girls, too, have a world of trouble in keeping their hands clean. Probably, on this very day, in the United States, one hundred thousand mothers have spoken words like these, in various tones: "Johnny, what dreadful hands to come to the table with! Go and wash them, sir, at once!" Johnny gazes ruefully at what his elder sister calls his "horrid paws," and wonders how they could have acquired their dismal hue. It is a mystery. He started clean in the morning; at least, he thought he did, and he has only been to school. Yet look at his hands! Black as a charcoal dealer's, with nails fearful to behold. Many boys wonder, naturally enough, how grown people keep their hands clean all day without taking much trouble about it. Boys handle every thing, whether clean or dirty, and half of them do not know how to wash their hands, or how to wipe them dry. Hands well-washed and perfectly dried will keep clean four times as long as hands half-washed and half-dried. Nails, too, are much more easily kept in good order if they are attended to frequently and with care and thoroughness.

Many, indeed, are the faults of the hands. One of the worst is pointing the finger of scorn at the faults of others. Biting the thumb was the Italian method of expressing contempt in the days of Romeo and Juliet, the tragedy of whose lives began with their servants biting their thumbs at one another. It is with the hands that boys pinch, scratch, fight and steal. Hamlet called his hands "pickers and stealers."

But, then, what beautiful and wonderful things the human hand can do! what lovely pictures it can paint; what enchanting music it can play; what valiant deeds it can do; what kind acts it can perform! Best of all, it can lift up the fallen, and welcome back to hope and new effort the repentent wanderer from the path of rectitude. We said the other week, that knowing teachers often judge of the quality of their pupils by looking at their mouths. But the hands, too, have a tale to tell and sometimes they tell very plainly.—Youth's Companion.

SMUT IN CORN.

Its Prevention Effected by Soaking the Seed in a Copper Sulphate Solution.

Smut in corn is fast becoming a prevailing evil, injuring the crops and poisoning the fodder and the cattle which consume it. Its nature is worth study, so that some remedy can be found for it. It is a pure parasitic disease, no doubt, which affects every part of the plant and is as liable to infect the seed and the soil as the plant itself. In fact the evidence goes to show that every part of the plant is infected, for the outburst of the seed of the fungus appears in every part, the roots, stem, leaves, flowers and seed being all more or less affected. The soil can not help but be infected by the large quantity of smut left upon it in the debris of the crop and that brought by the winds and washed down by the rains from the air in which it floats. The smut of corn is precisely like that of wheat or oats in its prominent characteristics and differs from the latter in some invisible points only, and the means for evading this which are used with effect with the smaller grains may be used equally with corn. We have been experimenting with corn smut for some years and have found the soaking of seed in a solution of sulphate of copper or one of chloride of potash—the common muriate of potash used as a fertilizer—has the same effect in preventing smut in the crop as it has with wheat and oats.

THE FAD OF THE DAY.

How Washington Statesmen Supply Themselves With a Stock of Electricity.

"I think I'll take my electricity," said a member of Congress as he came out of the House into the lobby. "I feel all worn out; that last speech has almost exhausted me. Won't you come along?" he asked of a fellow-member.

"I don't mind," the second Congressman replied. "I think a little will do me good, too."

The two members got on the elevator and went down to the basement to take their electricity. It is quite the "fad" nowadays for the members to take electricity. An electric apparatus has been fixed up in the engine-room in the basement, and daily the members avail themselves of the opportunity to get freshened up. A board, with a tooth piece of copper, is placed beneath the great belt of the large engine wheel, and the electricity thus generated is carried off by a wire attached to the board, which is long enough to be grasped by one who sits in a chair near by. The circuit is completed by the person holding the wire grasping a small brass chain attached to the railing around the engine's wheel. The system is thus filled quietly with electricity. The members say it is splendid after they have been out to receptions and suppers all night, or they have exhausted their brain power by speech-making or listening. A great many members take electricity, and some go to the basement of the capitol for it every day during the session.—Cor. Baltimore American.

NOT A DRUG.

Compound Oxygen is not a drug. It does not introduce an enemy into the system, but a kind and gracious healer. It does not assault or depress nature, as is always the case when crude drugs are taken, but comes to her assistance and restores her weakened vital forces. All of its effects are gentle, pervading, and vitalizing. If you are suffering from any disease which your physician has failed to cure, send to Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, for their pamphlet, and learn all about this wonderful treatment.

Orders for the Compound Oxygen Home Treatment will be filled by H. A. Matthews, 615 Powell Street, San Francisco.

There is a rich man in the Black Hills, says the Bismarck Times, who dates the beginning of his fortune from the day when he sold his wife for $4,000.

A SUGGESTION TO THE TRAVELING PUBLIC.

Tourists, emigrants and mariners find that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a medicinal safeguard against unhealthful influences, upon which they can implicitly rely, since it prevents the effects of vitiated atmosphere, unaccustomed or unwholesome diet, bad water, or other conditions unfavorable to health. On long voyages, or journeys in latitudes adjacent to the equator, it is especially useful as a preventive of the febrile complaints and disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, which are apt to attack natives of the temperate zone sojourning or traveling in such regions, and it is an excellent protection against the influence of extreme cold, sudden changes of temperature, exposure to damp or extreme fatigue. It not only prevents intermittent and remittent fever, and other diseases of a malarial type, but eradicates them, a fact which has been notorious for years past in North and South America, Mexico, the West Indies, Australia, and other countries.

Ash ejected from Cotopaxi in July, 1885, has yielded two-fifths of a troy ounce of silver to the ton. The metal has hitherto been unknown among volcanic products.

"SWEET MAUD MULLER."

Whittier's beautiful ballad contains a touching allusion to the many cares and sorrows which wear upon the "heart and brain" of a wife and mother. Thousands of weary suffering women have found Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" a marvellous recuperator of wasted strength, and of sovereign efficacy in all those derangements and maladies peculiar to their sex, by reason of which the vitality is gradually sapped, and the check robbed prematurely of its bloom. Price reduced to one dollar. By druggists.

DYSPEPSIA AND CONSTIPATION.

Henry B. Archer, Receiver of Taxes of the City of Yonkers, N. Y., says of BRANDRETH'S PILLS:

For the past ten years I have been using BRANDRETH'S PILLS for self and family. We find them a sovereign remedy for indigestion and constipation, taking one or two every night for ten days. They are also admirable blood purifiers, perfectly harmless but exceedingly effective as a cathartic. I first used them myself, particularly for biliousness and dyspepsia. They relieved me in two weeks. I cheerfully recommend them.

DO NOT POISON YOUR SYSTEM with medicines you know nothing about. Nearly every so-called remedy for Rheumatism and Neuralgia now offered to the public contains powerful and poisonous medicines that injure the stomach and leave the patient worse off than before.

Do not use them, but take "the old reliable" one that has stood the test for twenty-five years. One that is free from anything injurious to the system, composed wholly of roots and herbs, the medical properties of which are particularly adapted to blood diseases.

Dr. Pardee's Remedy is safe and effective. Can be used by both old and young with beneficial results. Five hundred dollars will be paid for any case where the use of Dr. Pardee's Remedy has in any way injured the patient. PARDEE MEDICINE CO.

BUYING FERTILIZERS.

Why It Pays to Purchase Them in the Shape of Feed for Live-Stock.

Ordinarily the average farmer can not afford to buy feed, nor can he to any great extent afford to purchase manure. If the farm has been allowed to run down through continued cropping without manuring or rotating so that the field has run down below a profitable margin, it may do to purchase commercial fertilizers in order to increase the yield. The principal dependence of the farmers must be upon barnyard manure and rotation.

If by using commercial fertillizers you can increase the yield of the crops so that more stock can be kept, and thereby increase your supply of farm-made manure, there may be many Western farmers who can make the investment profitable. So feed. If you have a good supply of corn fodder, wheat or oat straw, timothy and clover hay, you can buy bran and oil meal generally and feed with profits. For this reason, wheat or oat straw in themselves are not a complete feed. In fact they are of considerable less value of either of the others. But by taking clover, wheat, or oat straw and bran or meal, say in a feed of twenty-five pounds, you can give eleven each of clover and wheat or oat straw and three pounds of bran, and you have a feed equal to or nearly so to twenty-five pounds of good timothy hay—by combining you make the straw nearly equal in value with hay—because it supplies what the clover and bran lacks and then makes up what is deficient in the other. This, of course, greatly reduces the cost of feeding and in many cases considerably increases the supply. Profitable feeding implies having good stock and then feeding so as to secure the largest gain at the smallest expense. It does not pay to feed stock unless you can secure a steady gain from the start. But at the same time the expenses should be made as light as possible in order to increase the profits; under such circumstances feed can be purchased and fed out with profit.

If properly managed securing a large crop should enable us to feed an increased number of stock. Then if fed under good shelter, using all necessary precautions to make and save all the manure possible, we can secure a larger amount of manure, and with good management this ought to increase the yield of the crops again.

In order to secure a start of this kind you can purchase fertilizers and often you can purchase feed with profit. If your farm is ordinarily rich, and is not cropped out by following one crop with the same year after year until all the plant food required for that variety of crops is nearly or quite exhausted. By adopting a plan of rotation and economical feeding the fertility can be gradually increased. More stock fed and marketed and your profits will be increased accordingly.

I buy bran for milk cows the year round because the larger flow of milk and the increased value of the manure is sufficient to give me a good profit. Good clover hay and bran as a staple food is one of the best and cheapest feeds for milk cows I can obtain, and the quality of the manure is considerably increased by this combination. I do not mean to imply that every farmer will find these his cheapest feeds, only give my experience. Bran in nearly all cases increases the value of the manure and in a run-down farm can nearly always be used in combination with other foods profitably. And it is good economy when you are attempting to build up the farm to take advantage of each combination as can be done profitably that will enable you to feed more stock and secure more manure.—N. J. Shepherd, in Des Moines (Io.) Leader.

JEWELRY NOVELTIES.

Some of the Charming Articles to Be Worn the Coming Season.

White or colored enamel flowers are popular in silver.

A brisk demand for silver glove pungents, ornamented with gold applied work or in chased finish, is expected this season.

The large ball ear-rings, in plain Roman gold now in vogue, frequently have small diamonds or other stones imbedded in them.

A novel pin recently consisted of a crescent of graduated daisies, embracing between its horns a fine enamel painting.

Large pansies carved out of amethyst and set with pearls or diamonds are used as pins, pendants and hairpins combined.

A heavy double ring was recently seen, one shank of which bore an antique crest while its companion was set with a diamond.

Broad woven-wire, or figure 8 bracelets, as they are termed, are worn both in silver and gold, and have the merit of flexibility.

A triple cluster ring, consisting of a row of emeralds, sapphires or rubies circled with diamonds, is a pleasing novelty in this line.—Jewelers' Weekly.

BOWSER AND THE BABY.

The Mother of the Little Cherub Relates Some of Her Trials and Tribulations.

I may have heretofore mentioned the fact that Mr. Bowser and I do not exactly agree as to how a baby should be brought up. I think he is a very unreasonable father in various instances. He came home one day when baby was only three months old and found him crying.

"Mrs. Bowser, that baby's got corns!" exclaimed Mr. Bowser, as he hung up his hat.

"Corns?"

"Yes, corns! You act as if you never heard of corns. Put him down while I examine his feet."

"The idea! Who ever heard of a baby three months old having corns?"

"There's a good deal in this world you never heard of, Mrs. Bowser. Put the young'un down."

He examined the baby's feet, pulled his toes apart, and of course he didn't find any corns. I knew he wouldn't.

"Then what is he bawling about?" he persisted.

"Babies always cry more or less."

"They do, eh? Well, if this one doesn't cry less I'll find some way to make him! I shall hold him responsible from this day out."

Our baby had the hives, as every other baby has. Mr. Bowser came home and found me holding the child and mother preparing some warm drink. There were the blotches and pimples, but baby wasn't even fretting.

"What's the matter of that young monkey now?" demanded Mr. Bowser, as he caught sight of the pimples.

"Only the hives, my dear."

"Only! Have you had the doctor?"

"Why, no, There is no need of a doctor."

"Isn't there! Mrs. Bowser, that may be hives, and it may be small-pox! It looks more like the latter disease to me. If that young un has gone and brought the small-pox into this house I warn him to look out for himself! I'm a loving husband and fond father and all that, but I propose to draw a line with my children. I shall draw it at small-pox.

"Mr. Bowser" said my mother, "you should not get unduly excited. This is only a case of the hives. This child has yet to go through with measles, chicken-pox, whooping-cough and several other kindred diseases or ailments.

"He has, eh! He proposes to keep this house upset for the next eight or ten years, does he? Never! I'll lug him out this very night and lay him on somebody's door-step!"

Baby was five months old before Mr. Bowser suddenly discovered that he was bald-headed. He was holding the child at the time, and he rolled him into the crib and called me from the foot of the stairs:

"Mrs. Bowser, for Heaven's sake come down here as fast as you can!"

"What is it?" I asked as I hurried down.

"Why, this infernal young un's bald-headed!"

"Is that all? Why, I thought you had dropped him!"

"Is that all! Isn't that enough? He might as well die at once. Think of the ridicule that will be heaped upon my child from the very hour he is able to toddle to the door! Grown people will take him for some little old man who was sawed off for a dwarf, and children will yell: 'Bald-headed Bowser!' at him. Imagine our feelings as we hear the street gamins shout: 'Old Bowser, where's your bald-head!' And it has come to this!"

"Give the baby a chance, my dear."

"Chance! Chance! Haven't I give him every possible show since he was born? Hasen't he been the direct and only cause of my losing fifteen pounds weight in four months?"

"But his hair will come out, He'll have a good head of hair when he's a year old."

"Oh, he will! Yes, if he knows what's good for him he will. He's my child, of course I have got the feeling of a father, but sooner than have him grow up a bald-head, I'd abandon and disown him!"

One day soon after I found baby's scalp red and irritated, and the cook informed me that she saw Mr. Bowser fussing around the crib. I called him in from the back yard and charged him with sinister designs, and I know from his guilty manners that he had been trying some of his nostrums warranted to make hair grow.

On another occasion, when I was giving baby a bath, Mr. Bowser happened in, and it wasn't a minute before Mr. Bowser had made up his mind that the child's feet were too large.

"Yes, and gaze upon their size! I tell you, he was cut out for a giant! In two years my boots won't fit him!"

"Pshaw!"

"You may pshaw all you will, but he's going to be a monstrosity! It won't be five years before you'll see an advertisement in the papers reading:

"GREATEST WONDER
"OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY!
"Big-Footed Bowser, son of Old Man and Old Woman Bowser, of Detroit.
"Biggest Hoofs of any Human Being in this World!
"No. 21's don't come within a Mile of Fitting him!
"Fat, Happy and 10c pays the bill.

"Yes, that's what you'll see, Mrs. Bowser, and you'll grin and tickle over it and deadhead your way in every afternoon. I won't! The disgrace will have put me under the sod. Wash away, Mrs. Bowser, but don't you dare to let that young 'un know I'm the slightest relation to him—not the slightest!"—Detroit Free Press.

COURTSHIP IN MEXICO.

The Way in Which Lovers Are Compelled to Woo the Fair Senoritas.

Mexican ladies seldom go out without some one of the family or a servant. They do not have gentlemen visitors. There is no chance for a gallant youth to burn the midnight oil or gas at his prospective father-in-law's expense. If a young man has been acquainted with a girl from childhood, or by some accident is allowed to visit the family and becomes a lover, he is immediately forbidden the house, and must continue his courting as best he can. It is then the balcony is of service. A signal is agreed upon, and the senorita with ears alert hears it, and appears upon the balcony and converses with her lover below in the street. Notes are secretly exchanged, but never through the mail. To give you an idea of Mexican courtship and how Cupid breaks down the barriers made by ignorance and superstition, I will explain what is here termed "playing the bear." This is a very popular game—at least it seems so among the Mexicans. It is played by two persons, a lady and a gentleman. Both are usually young—in their teens as it were—though there are instances of the game being played by couples who had passed that period by several years.

A young man becomes smitten with a fair charmer at the opera or at church. He follows the lady to her home. Having that located, he makes it his business to be in that neighborhood as much as possible. He will stroll by the house with his eyes expressive of the state of his heart, and if he should catch a glimpse of his fair one he is happy. If he receives a smile he becomes intoxicated with love and is ready to play the "bear" for an indefinite period of time. If the lady is seated on the balcony when Romeo arrives upon the scene she usually withdraws, after exchanging glances with him. This programme is kept up for months. At last he receives a smile from fair Juliet. From smiles they get to exchanging a few words. There have been actual cases where the bear has frolicked about for a year or two before the fickle maid would exchange a word with him. Very often there are two or three bears casting longing eyes in the same direction. This frequently causes bad blood. As soon as the couple begin to know each other's voices matters progress rapidly. After they arrive at an understanding the persevering lover hastens to the padre. The kind priest finding that there is no reason for objection on either side, proceeds to intercede with the girl's parents and gain him admission to the domicile of his lady love. As soon as a young man enters the house he is considered engaged to the daughter. A wedding quickly follows, and there is no more "playing the bear" so far as that young man is concerned.

A great deal depends on the girl in this game. She can make it a long or a short game. There has been a case brought to my notice of a young man who has never missed an evening for nearly three years, and he is still only in the first stage of the game, posing or walking up and down in front of the senorita's home hoping to receive a smile. Close observers say that, so far, she only condescends to let him see the least bit of her white dress through the half-closed French windows that open on the balcony. He was asked why he played the bear so long when he met with so little encouragement His reply was:

"Oh, I love her so dearly! And she is so rich!" I passed by a house a few evenings since and saw a lover standing in the shadow of a friendly doorway. He had a guitar. I moved in the shadow to see the by-play. As the soft notes broke the quietude of the evening I saw a window open in a house adjoining and a senorita step out on the balcony. The music continued for a few moments and then ceased. I saw the fair one drop something over the balcony. The lover caught it and retired into the shadow again. I strolled up the street, crossed over, and went toward them. I saw he was holding something to his ear, and I knew telephone communications was perfect between these two loving hearts.

There is no such thing as being introduced, even though the lover be accompanied by a relation. Should the parties meet on the promenade and the relative desires to speak with his fair relative he excuses himself and joins her, leaving the lover out in the cold, as it were, until he gains admittance to her parents' house through the intercession of the priest. If while walking in the Alameda or Zocolo he meets the object of his affections he keeps at a respectful distance, hoping that his presence may be noticed by her. If while riding he sees her in a carriage, he places himself as near as possible and feels rewarded for his trouble if he catch a glimpse of her face at each turning or receives a sly glance of recognition. An engagement broken in Mexico is considered a serious matter. The lady is looked upon as disgraced and seldom has another suitor. —San Francisco Chronicle.

—Mail Carrier Rigney, of North Carolina, was stopped the other day on the Blue Ridge by highwaymen, who demanded the mail bag or his life. He gave up neither, but by skillful argument and shrewd persuasion convinced the robbers that the pouch contained nothing of value, and they let him go on unrobbed. Afterward he had them arrested.

A Texas Editor Rises to Explain.

The Standard wishes to correct a false impression in reference to the "firing" of the editor's wife and mother-in-law from the Methodist church. They were not put out of the building, as some suppose, but merely had their names erased from the roll of membership. The editor is not the kind of a man to quietly submit to having his wife and her mother "fired" bodily from a church or elsewhere. He is not built that way; neither is his mother-in-law.—Belleville Standard.

Didn't See the Joke.

"Yes, my hands are soft," said a dudish and conceited young fellow the other night in a small company, as he admiringly looked at those useless appendages that had never done a day's work. "Do you know how I do it?" he exclaimed proudly. "I wear gloves on my hands every night to sleep in."

"Do you sleep with your hat on also?" asked a pert young woman.

And the young fellow replied in the negative and looked wonderingly because the company smiled.—Hebrew Standard.

Capt. Blazier's Great Feat.

"Even our gallant commander was somewhat disconcerted at the idea of sailing up a cataract, but being a man of infinite resource, he reached down into the cabin of his craft, and much to the surprise of the party, dragged forth a pair of telegraph pole slippers, donning which he ascended the frozen column of the Hippowatomie Geyser with all the agility of one accustomed to any or all climes."—Vol. IV, cap. 4, Life's Canoe Expedition to Pike's Peak.

"American News."

During a trial at Tazewell Court House, Va., which took place recently, a counsel accused a witness of perjury; the witness immediately retorted that the counsel not only made an invariable practice of walking round the truth, but at times told lies that would have shocked Ananias. At this juncture both gentlemen drew revolvers and had a high old time of it with the six shooters. On the first shot being fired, the judge promptly disappeared under his desk. Crack! crack! crack! echoed through the court till the shooting irons were emptied. Then five stretchers were brought in, and five wounded men were carried out. One was the learned counsel. After their removal the judge cautiously crept from his place of shelter, mounted the bench, rebuked the witness and the trial was resumed.—London Judy.

Not Pure Latin.

A bright, mischievous city schoolboy, who liked fooling better than study, recently fooled his teacher by asking her if these words were Latin or not. She could not give a direct answer, but promised to investigate and report. These were the mysterious words:

Inmudeelis Inclaynoneis.

Translated:

In fir, tar is. In oak, none is.
In mud, eel is. In clay, none is.
—Boston Budget.

The Right Password, but the Wrong Smell.

A Good Templar in Chico, Cal., got full and went up to the lodge room in that condition. He knocked at the inner door and gave the password to the guardian, who was a Milesian and who had, with the mother wit of his race, placed his nose to the wicket instead of his ear. He repeated the word "Abstinence" the second time and asked: "Dennis, why doncher open 'er door? Hain't I got the right password?" "Yis, sor," bawled Dennis, within hearing of the whole lodge, "you do be having the right password intirely, but, be jabers, sor, yez hav the wrong shmell."—Portland (Ore.) Mercury.

FIFTY YEARS AGO.

Historical and Statistical Facts Relating to Chicago's Marvelous Growth.

"Born, at Vandalia, Ill., Saturday, March 4, 1837, the City of Chicago." Historic words are these. The birth of a city but half a century ago, having at the time of incorporation but 4,000 inhabitants. This year that babe records her fiftieth anniversary as a city with a population of 750,000 people. Enterprise and thrift were her parents, natural resources her succor, and she was clothed by the indomitable will and perseverance of honest hearts, strong hands, and clear heads, and a situation unsurpassed. What a history is this! A city born out of swamp lands and odorous wild-onion beds. Grown to be a mighty metropolis in thirty-four short years, destroyed almost in a day by a demon of fire, and within a period of another sixteen years entirely rebuilt with a grandeur and stability almost beyond the comprehension of those not familiar with the city's history.

August 10, 1833, the young village of Chicago was incorporated as a town. The event was talked of with pride by the few hardy settlers living in the vicinity, for then the wily savage built his wigwam unmolested within a stone's throw of every inhabitable building in the fort, and the adventurous settler, amid continued hardships, cultivated a small portion of the fertile prairies far away from the every-day comforts of civilization, and tilling a soil which he called his own only by virtue of a "squatter's claim." The county of Cook, named in honor of the Hon. Daniel P. Cook, had been portioned off from Peoria county but two years before—in 1831—when the village of Chicago was incorporated into a town by an almost unanimous vote, 12 voting in favor and 1 against the change. The following year—1834—the poll-list had but 111 names registered as voting, and the total tax receipts amounting to but $18.90, a sum insufficient to meet current expenditures and necessitating a loan of $60 for street improvements. Gradually the tide of emigration drifted westward, and many stopped at that point, coming by boat or horseback around the lake by way of Detroit and along the lake shore. New buildings sprang up like mushrooms to accommodate the newcomers, and by 1836 luxuries as well as the necessities of life were among the imports of the "merchants" doing business here. The uncertainty of title to lands vested in the Government by the Indians caused urgent appeals to be made for relief, and in July, 1836, the first sale of canal lands was held here and the titles given by the canal trustees to purchasers.

From this time an unhealthy period of speculation began; values were very unsteady and varied greatly from week to week, resulting in a financial crash the following year. A branch of the Second State Bank, the first to do a general banking business, was located here in 1836, and went down with the rest in the eventful year of '37. On November 18, 1836, the board of trustees for the "town" of Chicago held a meeting and ordered "that the president invite the citizens of each of the three districts (north, south and west) of the town to meet in their respective districts and select three suitable persons to meet with the board of trustees on Thursday evening next and consult together with them on the expediency of applying to the Legislature of the State for a city charter and adopting a draft to accompany such application."

All the provisions of a city were finally agreed upon and the board of town trustees sent a messenger by the stage-coach with it to Vandalia, about seventy-five miles below Springfield, where the Legislature was in session. The act of the incorporation of the city was approved March 4, 1837.

The first census taken after the incorporation was July 1, 1837, and showed a total population of 4,179, divided as follows:

WARD.	Under 5 years of age.		Over 5, under 21 years.		21 years and over.		Colored.
	Male.	Female.	Male.	Female.	Male.	Female.	Male.	Female.

White, 3,989; black, 77; sailors on vessels owned here, 113—total, 4,179.

It was also shown by this census that there existed, July 1, 4 warehouses, 398 dwellings, 29 dry-goods stores, 5 hardware, 3 druggists, 19 grocery and provisions, 10 taverns, 26 groceries, 17 lawyers' offices, and 5 churches.—Chicago News.

TURKISH BEGGARS.

How Mendicants and Bearers of Burdens Are Organized in Constantinople.

Generally the eye first rests upon one of the numerous beggars, who are always at hand, muttering their words of praise to the donor of a penny, or their curses to the unheeding passenger. The majority are blind, or pretend to be so, and each one has his preferred spot, where he sits in his rags, perfectly oblivious to all but his own wants. Others are hideously maimed and the offensive part is always held up to view in the hope of exciting pity. These are mostly men. The women and children have their beaten track, over which they follow people and implore alms. They seem to go no further, and often by the emphatic repetition of "hiddy git" we rid ourselves of them sooner. We seldom see them rewarded, except by Turkish subjects, and it is said that they give freely, as the Koran requires it of them. They are particularly generous on all days of special religious observance. At such times these beggars congregate in the most attractive places, and doubtless make large sums. We learn that many of these pitiable-looking creatures are in reality very well off, and only don their poverty for the sake of trade. They have meetings, and there decide where to take up their positions and how to divide their spoils.

The peculiar tread of a man's heavy feet excites our wonder, and we look only to be horrified at seeing a human being bowed under a load that would make a horse groan. Often, too, three or four of these "hamals" work together, carrying their burdens by means of long poles. They have their resting-place about half way across the bridge, and to us it is a great relief to see them there having a little breathing spell, and what an immense relief it must be to them. People here consider them not much more than beasts of burden, and thus their life is so much the more pitiable. They dress in a very clumsy manner in coarse loose clothes and the weight of their great flat leather shoes must be something astonishing, while their leather-cushioned pack saddles alone would be heavy enough for an ordinary person. Each locality has its company of hamals, and they all live together off a common fund and hence work into each other's hands. For instance, we can not get just one of them to draw water because the others want to carry it from a distance and have us pay them by the load. If we wish two hamals to work for us they make a great fuss and want the whole company to come and bother, for the wages are to be divided no matter how many or how few do the work. They have one head man who does all the managing.

They are not allowed to bring their families from the interior, and they seem to lose all their individuality living huddled together so, without any of the comforts or pleasures of a home. We can not imagine harder physical work than they do, and yet their pay seems to be in the inverse ratio, for it is very little each one gets when a whole company shares it. Articles that are too bulky for them to handle are transported on the backs of horses and donkeys. What would we in America think of seeing bricks, sticks of wood and even long pieces of lumber tied together and carried this way instead of in wagons? I have seen a donkey so covered with boxes that the animal itself was entirely hidden. The venders of bread, meat, fruit, etc., carry their wares on their heads or on donkeys, according to the quantity they have to dispose of. Their cries can be heard almost from one end of the bridge to the other, but one must know what they sell before their monotone can be guessed. The most picturesque of these venders is the Persian, with his long, fur-lined cloak and one shoulder covered with his rugs and skins which are always so attractive.—Constantinople Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

DEVOTED TO CATS.

The Peculiar Craze Which Has Beggared a Once Wealthy Countess.

All mankind has heard of the Countess de La Torre, of London, who is crazy on the subject of cats. She has a whole string of cats following her wherever she goes, and her house is occupied by cats from garret to cellar. It has never yet been definitely settled just how many cats the Countess does possess. She sometimes goes to visit her friends, and is invariably accompanied by a feline coterie. Her fortune has been exhausted in various freaks of disordered fancy, and she is now almost a beggar. She went recently to visit a lady at Hammersmith, and, as she took a whole tribe of cats with her, she became such an intolerable nuisance that her hostess, after many hints in vain to get her away, in a fit of despair went to Police Judge Paget, of the district, and made a complaint. Among the questions propounded by the justice in his monotonous inquiry was: "How many cats had the Countess with her?" The complainant did not know, but the inspector of nuisances declared that he had come along the day before and removed twelve. Mr. Justice Paget said that he had heard of the Countess before. He expressed great sympathy for the complainant, but said that the only way for her to get rid of her troublesome guest and her cats, since they had come into her house by invitation, was to put them out by force, if they would not go by moral suasion. The lady returned home and had the Countess and the remnant of her visiting contingent of cats ejected.—Cor. N. Y. World.

EARLY STEAMBOATING.

How the Captain of a River Boat Killed a Pilot to Save His Vessel.

One of the bravest, as well as the most notable river men who ever navigated the Ohio is Captain David M. Dryden, who now lives in Ballard County. Captain Dryden is seventy-five years of age, and spent sixty years of his life on the river. He is widely known, and a more competent man never turned a wheel. Recently he was in Louisville, and was recounting some of his remembrances of river life. In 1836 he was pilot on the Swiftsure, a mail line packet plying between this city and Cincinnati. The Paul Jones also ran in the same trade, and a great rivalry existed between the two boats. Each boasted of superior speed. One cold day in January, 1836, both boats puffed out of this harbor, and the captain of each resolved that his boat should be the first to land at Cincinnati. Pine knots, coal oil, bacon and every thing that would make a blaze were thrown into the furnaces, and the engineers received orders to turn her wide open. For some miles they were exactly side by side, and although both engines were doing their utmost, neither had the advantage. The captains and crews were greatly excited, and the boats quivered under the immense steam pressure. Finally the Swiftsure began slowly to forge ahead of its rival. Sylvester Edwards, pilot of the Jones, saw the race was lost, and instantly resolved that if he could not distance the Swiftsure he would sink her. He accordingly turned his bow toward the side of the other boat. Captain Dryden whistled and shouted to him to keep off, but he did not heed the signals, and in a few moments the sharp iron-covered bows of the Jones were nearly against the Swiftsure. Captain Dryden realized at once that unless something was done his boat would be sunk and his passengers drowned. Hastily snatching a rifle from the floor he fired through the window, and, the ball striking Edwards in the center of the forehead, killed him instantly. The Jones then veered off, and the collision was averted. Captain Dryden was tried in Burlington, Boone County, and acquitted.

During the war Captain Dryden commanded the Monarch, one of the most successful rams belonging to the Government. The conquests of that gallant cruiser are familiar to every one. He also was the commander of the Chillicothe, an iron-clad with two guns, that was fitted out at Jeffersonville in 1862. Its adventurous career is also a matter of history. For many years he was a falls pilot, and was at the wheel of the ill-fated Niles when she went to pieces on the rocks, in 1854. The boat had safely passed the rocks at the dam and plunged into the channel of the falls. Suddenly she struck and filled rapidly. By the time the crew and passengers were all taken off, Captain Dryden found himself on the wrecked vessel alone. Before the rescuing party could reach him the boat turned over. Captain Dryden clung to the woodwork and climbed on top. By the means of an improvised tiller he steered the hull over the falls and landed her at New Albany.—Louisville Times.

HINTS TO PARENTS.

Why Home Should Be Made Attractive in Every Possible Way.

Mothers and fathers who have sons and daughters growing up do not always realize as they should the great necessity of making home not only a place where their children eat, sleep and are clothed, but one in which they find positive happiness and enjoyment. In nine cases out of ten where you see a wild youth or giddy girl, go to their homes; you will find them cheerless, unattractive, or perhaps actually disagreeable.

The nature of youth is excessively restless; it has a longing for action and excitement, ambitions more or less vain, and always the irrepressible desire to know a broader life. Repress these natural instincts, and you will be sure to throw them into any society that in a measure will gratify their longings. Your sons do not go to the public bar-rooms at first for the taste of the liquor which they have not as yet acquired; they go for the gay companions they find there. The influence for good or evil that a mother has over her sons, the control that she exercises over their destinies, is a grave responsibility. Throw open your best room to the children in the evenings. Have books and a magazine or two, even if you put away less money. Stimulate their ambition and invent occupations and amusement for your children. Give them games and endear yourself to them by sharing their joys and plays. Encourage them to be affectionate. Do not with formal coldness starve them for want of caresses. One of the loveliest young men we have ever known, although he is over six feet, and nearly twenty, never fails to kiss his parents at night, and yet he is not a milksop, but occupies (for so young a man) a high position.—American Agriculturist.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

SATURDAY, MAY 21.....1887.

The name of William T. Coleman, of San Francisco, continues to be mentioned as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for President. Though Mr. Coleman has long refused to be a candidate for public office, yet he has given the best of all proof that he possesses very great talent for office. Only a very few men have shown at an early age such ability for the conduct of very great affairs as made them the leaders in times of great emergency. Among such men are Caesar, Warren Hastings and William Pitt. Mr. Coleman, at the age of thirty-one years, showed that he possessed the same kind of executive and administrative ability for which these great men were distinguished. It is true that Mr. Coleman had not so extensive a field for the display of his ability as they had; but so far as opportunity called for the exercise of his powers his conduct of affairs was such as to warrant the confident assurance that he would have been equally successful in dealing with great national concerns. He is a great man who is always equal to the occasion, and Mr. Coleman has been equal to the most trying emergencies. Now at the ripe age of about sixty-one years, with matured judgment, a strong man in body and mind, he would make such a chief magistrate as a free people might well be proud of.

In one particular Mr. Coleman proved himself a greater man than either Pitt or Hastings. Clothed with great power in times of great emergency, ambition prompt these men to use their power for selfish ends. But when Coleman had secured the public safety he at once laid down the extraordinary powers that had been conferred upon him and returned to the station and duties of a plain citizen. In this particular he showed that his character was akin to the highest order of patriotism.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, MAY 21.....1887.

Mrs. Horner left for Los Angeles on Tuesday, going by way of Mojave.

Mrs. Clark, of Marysville, is at Independence. She is looking around with a view to invest in land.

S. D. Thurston, Under-Sheriff, got back last Wednesday from Stockton, where he had taken an insane man.

The property offered for sale by J. W. Symmes is one of the most desirable in Owens Valley. See his advertisement.

Johnny Lewis met with an accident at Keeler this week which incapacitated him for work, compelling him to return home.

Mr. Lasky is having a new store fitted up at Lone Pine, and will remove his stock of goods into the new quarters within a few weeks.

Charles Levy offers a fine farm for sale near the town of Bishop Creek. It is excellent land, well improved, with a good water right and title perfect.

A. R. Conklin Esq., accompanied by Miss M. Conklin, who has been making an extended visit to San Francisco, arrived on Wednesday.

The Leak Glove Manufacturing Co. are not afraid to advertise and call their gloves the best. Any man who drives knows how hard it is to get a good pair of gloves. Try their brand and see.

C. D. Fitch, of Virginia City, arrived at Independence at the beginning of the week. He made but a short stay in town and went on to Darwin and Panamint, where he proposes to engage in mining.

In levying the assessment of the county for the present year about sixty thousand acres of newly settled lands are entered up to March 1st. These new settlements have all been made in Owens Valley.

It is very gratifying to note how steadily the county indebtedness is being reduced. The report of the County Auditor, published in another column, shows that the debt at present amounts to no more than $57,302 20.

Mr. Frank C. Parker, son of the late Abraham Parker has been at Independence the past week or two, looking after the settlement of his father's estate. Mr Parker is a man of middle age. His home is at Baldwin, Maine.

A new bell will be put in place in the M. E. Church soon. No sweeter music was ever heard than the sound of bells floating out on the calm air of a Sunday morning or evening. No other sounds will so forcibly recall scenes of early life.

Never before was there such a prospect for a fine fruit crop around Independence as at present. Apricots and nectarines are already nearly as large as hen's eggs; apples pears, peaches and plums are of good size and all tree are heavily laden. Densmore, Baxter, Robinson, Symmes and other fruit growers all make like reports.

In real newspaper enterprise, the collection of interesting news as distinguished from mere trash, the San Francisco Call has no superior on the Pacific Coast, if indeed it has an equal. There is not a part of the world within reach of the telegraph from which the Call does not present its readers with the latest and most interesting information, and yet it does not fill its columns with every sensational and scandalous rumor. No paper in the State has lately shown more improvement than the Call.

161 acres well improved with good dwelling and out-houses, farming machinery, horses, cattle, etc. Located in the most desirable portion of the valley. Good water title. For further particulars inquire of DIVINE SERVICE.—To-morrow Rev. J. M. De La Matyr will preach in the M. E. Church at 11 o'clock a. m. and at 8 o'clock p. m. Everybody is invited to attend.

NEW COUNTY HOSPITAL.—What was formerly known as the Lone Pine Hotel has been fitted up as a County Hospital. Mrs. Stewart, former landlady of the Whitney House, has charge of the Hospital. Every part of the building is scrupulously clean and neat, and every needed provision is made for the care and comfort of the inmates. No higher commendation can be given to the new hospital than to say that the patients are likely to be as well cared for as they were in the institution so long and so well managed by Mrs. Lewis at Camp Independence.

THE IRRIGATION LAW.

Some people in the district appear to have much difficulty in getting the meaning of the irrigation law. They are told that if the proposed irrigation district shall be formed six, or eight, or a dozen assessments may and will be levied each year, and think the poorer settlers will be "frozen out" of their homes. This stupid gossip frightens poor people, who have not seen a copy of the law, and who have no more knowledge of its provisions than the ignorant inventors of such rubbish. The law under which irrigation districts may be formed provides that surveys and estimates of the cost of the canals or ditches shall be made; that bonds shall be issued and sold, and the proceeds used to pay for the building of such canals or ditches; that an annual tax shall be levied upon the real estate within such district to pay the interest upon such bonds; that there shall not be any obligation upon the district to pay any part of the principal of said bonds till the end of ten years from the date of their issuance, and the whole of said bonds, principal and interest, must be paid before the end of the next ten years, being twenty years from the date of the issuance of the bonds.

No assessments whatever can at any time be levied under this law. All necessary funds must be realized from the sale of bonds; and the interest on these bonds shall be provided for by a tax levied once each year upon all the real property within the district. Exactly as an assessment is made, and taxes paid each year for county purposes, so will assessment be made and tax levied for the irrigation district, and in no other way. Now let us look at the amount of tax it may be necessary to levy each year. The proposed district contains about 50,000 acres. It is roughly estimated that the canal can be built for $90,000. In round numbers let us say it will cost $100,000. Men who have good knowledge of financial affairs say that the bonds can be placed for 5 per cent. interest per annum. Let us say the interest will be 6 per cent. per annum; then the amount to be raised by tax each year will be $6,000. Divide this sum by 50,000, the number of acres in the district, and the annual tax on each acre in the district will be $.12; amount of tax to be paid each year on on 160 acres $19 20. Now let each land holder consider for himself what the land is worth without water, and what it would be worth with water enough upon it so that it could be covered with grain and alfalfa fields, orchards and vineyards, and this is what will result from the building of the canal.

For sale or Rent.

Notice of an Election.

State of California, County of Inyo, Clerk of the Board of Supervisors office.

Whereas, the Board of Supervisors did, at a regular meeting held in said County and State on May 5th 1887, establish an Irrigation District No. 1, of Inyo County, and fix the boundaries of the same according to an Act of the General Assembly of the State of California, entitled "An act to provide for the organization and government of Irrigation Districts and to provide for the acquisition of water and other property and for the application of water thereby for irrigation purposes," approved March 7th, 1887, and directing the Clerk thereof to give notice as in said Act provided:

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the boundaries of said district are as follows:

Beginning at the quarter section corner on the line between sections two and eleven in township No. eleven, south, of range No. thirty-four east M. D. AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer

Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without teams.

JOHN C. EVANS, Sweetland, Md., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer saves more hard labor and money in a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will get up any instrument that will take as much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one at every house. If they had to take the feathers from under their wife and babies to pay for it."

JOHN R. DOBIE, JR., jeweler, Newark, Ind., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. Yes, it is the best machine ever invented by man. 24. We have just as good Stoves on Monday as on any other day. 35. If you run short, you can not buy ours for gold."

I will ship a sample to those desiring an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best washer in the world. Saves one-half labor, clothes and soap. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.

WHY HE CARRIED A POTATO.

THE BROKER ALWAYS KEPT ONE IN HIS HIP POCKET.

He Did Not Carry it For Luck, But to Keep Rheumatism at Bay—A Friend Points Out a Better Thing and Investigation Proves Him to be Right—A Wonderful Discovery.

New York World, March 6, 1887

RIDING down town the other morning on the Third avenue road I caught a later train than usual and found the car full of 1-o'clock brokers on their way to Wall street to begin their day's business. Four natty-looking men occupied the cross seats opposite each other in the middle of the car. They were evidently well acquainted and old-time social as well as business friends. The talk was stocks, of course—how Lackawanna went down and O. T. up and down, and the discussion was getting warm when the oldest member of the party pulled out a handkerchief from his hip-pocket and in the action dropped something on the floor. All four stopped talking until the lost object was finally fished out from under a seat. The finder gravely examined it, held it up for the inspection of the others and asked, "What the deuce is it?"

"A potato," replied the owner, looking a little sheepish and reaching out for it.

"What are you carrying it around in your pocket for? Do you expect a famine? Have you got a steak also in your coat pocket?"

"No, but I want my potato. It is for rheumatism."

"For rheumatism?"

"Yes; don't you know that if you carry a potato in your pocket it will cure rheumatism? It hasn't cured me yet," he added thoughtfully, caressing his knee with gentle touch, "but I live in hope. So give me my potato."

He got his mascot and the other three gentlemen laughed at the superstition of their friend, who went on to tell how he had suffered for two years with twinges of rheumatism and how nothing seemed to do him any good. The one who had found the potato said that it served him right to suffer so. Any man who did not know enough to take the proper medicine ought to have the rheumatism, and have it bad, too. The potato carrier protested that he had tried all kinds of remedies and employed the best physicians in New York city, but without effect.

"But you haven't tried the right thing," continued his friend. "My wife was troubled the same way for years, and in four months was completely cured. I will bet you a dinner for the four of us at Delmonico's that I can tell you a secret that will make you well before the summer hotels open again. Of course, you won't believe I shall succeed, so I am sure to win the bet." The average broker takes to a wager as naturally as a duckling to the water, and of course the bargain was agreed to. The young man fished about in his wallet and at last from some secret hiding-place drew out a card inscribed: "Pardee Medicine Company, Rochester, N. Y." "You write to the company," he said, passing over the card, "and get half a dozen bottles of Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy, and if you are not satisfied I shall be glad to furnish the dinner. But there is not the slightest probability of my being the victim. I am sure to win and you are sure to get cured. For four years my wife was almost a constant sufferer. Except in the brightest weather she was always complaining. We tried everything, but somehow the disease seemed to hang on. Then an old doctor, retired from practice, who spends his time reading, told me that he had heard of a discovery of a new way of treating rheumatism. An old English army physician, Dr. Pardee, had discovered a new remedy that treated rheumatism in a perfectly new way—as a disease of the blood. The thing struck me as at least possible, and with some little trouble I got Dr. Pardee's address and sent for some of the medicine. The result you see in this wager. Why, after the very first bottle my wife was a different woman. That was only last year, and ever since I have gone about praising Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy just as if I were a paid agent. Wonder whether I couldn't collect from the Pardee company for the good I do? But here is my station," as the conductor called out Hanover square, and the four friends filed out together.

Of course I don't know yet who won the wager; but I mean to find out as soon as possible, and will tell you all about it and the dinner. But this illustrates as well as anything I have seen in a long time the fondness for betting which possesses the average Wall-street man. In no other place in all this green earth would two men dare to make such a serious thing as rheumatism the subject of a wager.

I fell in with an old friend, a doctor, shortly after this and was telling him about it, when he said: "Do you know that discovery you heard mentioned is a singular thing. Of course, as a regular practitioner I ought not to say anything about it, but I have looked into the matter some and am convinced that Dr. Pardee has struck upon something that medical men have been searching after for years. Ever since the days when Socrates taught in Athens and Antony made love to Cleopatra, man has been cursed with this disease. Down through the ages, century after century has slipped away and still this scourge has maintained its hold on the children of men. Liniments, lotions, blisters and all kinds of local applications have had their day and passed away. It has remained for the genius of the nineteenth century to discover the true cause of the disease. As the blood is the life, so any interruption to the healthful course of the blood finds expression in this form of pain. Now, Dr. Pardee has located the cause of the trouble and seems to have marked out a remedy. It is what men hoped for when the Pyramids were building and it is what men are hoping for now. If he has, at last, solved the problem the discovery will take its place in history by the side of the discovery of chloroform and the grand inventions of the age."

It seems odd to the laymen to connect such apparently different diseases as neuralgia and rheumatism, yet they both come from the blood, says this physician, and are cured by somewhat similar remedies. The medicines of the Pardee Company, in their action upon the system, are said to give to the patient a feeling of freshness and vigor, to send the rich blood pulsing through the veins in a fashion that makes women feel like heroines and men like conquerors. Somehow, and in some way that I don't profess to understand, it takes hold of the kidneys and liver, stirs these organs up like a farmer rousing a lazy tramp, and makes such things as sick headaches and those gloomy, depressed feelings that some people are often possessed of, impossible. I don't know why the medicine does all this, but I have half a dozen wildly enthusiastic friends to say it has helped them in that way, and that suffices for me. All Pacific Coast druggists keep the Pardee Remedy.

"J. Pot."

Thomas N. Nichol, who never plays cards, nevertheless tells a story about card playing. A coterie of his acquaintances who were poker players had a night session in Chicago which closed in a contest over a jack pot containing some $350. They had started their game on Saturday and on looking at their watches discovered that it was nearly 5 o'clock on Sunday morning. One of the players suggested, by way of penance, that whoever won the jack pot should take it to church that day and put it into the contribution box. The winner was somewhat of a humorist. He put the cash into an envelope, marked it "J. Pot," and laid it on the contribution plate. On Monday morning a week later, happening to pick up a paper, he was astonished to find in it a report of a sermon delivered by the pastor of the church, in which a feeling allusion was made to the fact that on the previous Sunday a kind stranger had made a generous donation to the church. "I sincerely hope and trust," was the clergyman's language, "that if Mr. J. Pot is still in the city and intends to remain here he will make this his permanent religious home."—New York Tribune.

Senator Sawyer Knows Good Pine Lands.

Senator Philetus Sawyer is a very close buyer when he gets into the market to purchase pine lands. Usually the man who sells to him does not know who the buyer is. A few summers ago Philetus was up in Oconto county inspecting some pine, and when he sounded the owner as to the sale that individual, an old man with grizzly hair and whiskers, hauled out a newspaper containing a wood cut of Sawyer, looked at it closely and then at the stranger, and said:

"You be old Sawyer! Blamed if I haven't been looking for you for these three years. This land ain't for sale. Pine that Sawyer wants is pine, and I'll just keep this here patch to hand down as a heirloom to my children."

No trade was made, and the price of pine land in that region rose immediately thereafter, something that does not take place very often in Wisconsin until after Sawyer has made his purchase.—Chicago Herald.

NICE FARM BUTTER.

Three Things Which Must be Practiced to Secure a Good Article.

There has been much comment of late as to the question of profit in butter-making on the farm. With the average butter-makers, as a rule, the profits are meagre, and the quality of the product is only such as to diminish, rather than increase, the demand for this article. Intelligent study and mastery of the principles (and methods following correct principles), is the most necessary duty of those who would pursue this industry with profit. But the mastery of principles and methods is not sufficient. Integrity, pride of reputation, and ambition to excel in the work should be the ruling purpose with all manufacturers, small and great. The slovenly manufacturer and his butter (?) should have the most complete ostracism. Neatness deserves the most cordial recognition.

Three things, too, are to be practiced, besides the mere process of the work. 1. Winter dairying must become the rule with the general farmer, and the cows must have as diligent attention, with this object in view, as the growing or harvesting of the grain. 2. The cows should be fed with a purpose (an intelligent one) to cause their milk to furnish the largest quantity of butter. This embodies also the best of care in furnishing pure water to drink and shelter from wind and storm. 3. The same enterprise is appropriate in the dairy appliances that is usual in other branches of the farm work. In addition to the material improvements, such as churns, refrigerators, cabinets, etc., the men need, in some cases, more application of muscle to the work in all its departments, especially where one woman does the housework for a husband and three or four hired men. It is no trifling part of the work to take the butter to market in very attractive, neat packages. An inviting appearance is half of its value.—National Live-Stock Journal.

CELTIC NAMES.

Macs, O's, Murphys and Sullivans Residing in Our Four Principal Cities.

The relative numbers of Celtic inhabitants in the four principal cities of the Union must be a matter of interest to every Irish nationalist. To find out such a matter with absolute certainty would be well nigh impossible; but by means of the directories of the cities, about the Celtic population of which we desire to speak, a very close approximation can be made as to the Irish element they contain. We had recently an opportunity of examining the directories of the four principal American cities—New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Boston—and took the trouble to count the number of columns of each directory that contained the most common and numerous Irish names, and the results are very interesting. It will invariably be found that whenever there are the most O's and Macs, and the most Murphys and Sullivans, there is the largest Irish population; for the names Murphy and Sullivan, and names which begin with O and Mac, are the most numerous among the Celtic race. The prefix O should, by right, be retained before the names Sullivan and Murphy, but in most cases it has been discarded.

The number of names in the columns of the directories of the four cities mentioned is very nearly the same and will average about eighty. The following table gives the number of O's and Macs, Sullivan and Murphys in the four cities mentioned:

NEW YORK.	Columns.
Names beginning with O	42
Names beginning with Mac	137
Sullivans and Murphys combined	24
Total columns	204
PHILADELPHIA.
Names beginning with O	28
Names beginning with Mac	176
Sullivans and Murphys combined	5
Total columns	210
CHICAGO.
Names beginning with O	13
Names beginning with Mac	71
Sullivans and Murphys combined	28
Total columns	112
BOSTON.
Names beginning with O	30
Names beginning with Mac	91
Sullivans and Murphys combined	31
Total columns	154

From the foregoing it will be seen, contrary to the general belief, that Philadelphia is absolutely and that Boston is relatively the most Celtic of American cities. The population of New York is, in round numbers, 1,200,000, Philadelphia 900,000, Chicago 700,000, and Boston 400,000. Philadelphia, about one-third less in population than New York, has fifteen more columns of Celtic names; but Boston, in proportion to its population, is the most Celtic of all. If New York were as Celtic as Boston its directory would have about 550 columns of O's, Macs, Sullivans and Murphys, instead of 204; and if it were as proportionately Celtic as Philadelphia its directory would contain about 300 instead of 204 columns of the Celtic names mentioned. Chicago is relatively and absolutely the least Celtic of the four cities. It is about as populous and a half as Boston, but its directory contains only 112 columns of the prominent Celtic name against 152 in the Boston directory. We use the term Celtic instead of Irish, because a considerable minority of the names beginning with Mac are Scotch rather than Irish. Boston, then, is in proportion to its population the most Celtic and the most Irish city in America.

The case of Philadelphia is curious. It is said to contain a smaller foreign-born population than any of the great cities of America, and this is probably so; yet, with the exception of Boston, it is relatively the most Celtic of the four cities. This is explained by the fact that long ago—as far back as the time when what are now known as the United States were British colonies—there was a vast tide of emigration from Ireland to this country, and the greater part of it was directed to Pennsylvania. The difference between the Irish element in Boston and Philadelphia is that in the former city it is new and in the latter it is old.

When one remembers that the prefixes O and Mac have been dropped in very nearly half the names that originally had them, and also that about fifty per cent. of Irish names have been either translated or so changed that it takes some one even more trained than a savant to recognize them in their mutilated American forms, he is astonished at the immensity of the Irish element in America, and marvels how it came to pass that the million and a quarter of people that Ireland contained only two hundred years ago have grown to an inconceivable multitude that have spread absolutely over half the earth.—Chicago Citizen.

Queer Gastronomical Experiments.

A correspondent of one of the technical journals has been making some experiments in gastronomy, which certainly do credit to his power of overcoming natural prejudices. He caught, by the aid of his terrier, two plump barn rats, and after preparation, presented them to his cook to be made into a pie. The pie was, he states, delicious, and was voted a luxury by some friends who partook of it unwittingly. He also says that he can from experience safely recommend a hedgehog stewed in milk as a real delicacy. It is well known that roast hedgehog is a favorite dish with English gypsies. Our readers may also remember that during the last siege of Paris its inhabitants were reduced to such straits that vermin of this kind were often submitted to similar trial. One will recollect that so palatable were they that long after the siege, when beef and mutton were again plentiful, rats often found their way to the French bill of fare, disguised alike by cunning flavoring and fanciful names.—Chambers' Journal.

Dakotan—Husband home, Mrs. Burgess?

Mrs. Burgess—No, but I expect he will be in a day or two. We're going to have a thaw, you know.

Dakotan—Where is John?

Mrs. Burgess—Over in that second snow drift yonder. I sent him on an errand two weeks ago, and that was all the far he got. Poor man! I shouldn't wonder if he'd begun to get discouraged by this time.—Tit Bits.

Panic vs. Tonic.

"Dad's kinder weak this mornin' 'n he wants something that will act as a sort of panic," said Johnny Gubbins to the druggist, as he handed out the regulation half pint bottle. The druggist thought of the old man's unpaid account, and after filling the bottle with the poorest brand of whisky he added a few drops of croton oil, and the old man had a panic under his breast that doubled him up like a jack knife.—Danville (N. Y.) Breeze.

THE CZAR'S DOMINIONS.

Ex-Consul-General Butler's Opinion of Russia and Its Government.

"Are there not a good many Jews in Russia?"

"Yes; one-half of the Jews in the world live in Russia, or about three and a half millions of people. If you suppose that the United States is full of Jews you should see Russia. The public feeling there is against them. They are the only people in all Russia allowed to emigrate wherever they choose. Nobody else in the country can leave it; the understanding is among all the component races of Russia that they belong to the country, and every subject must have a passport, like every foreigner. No subject can pack his traps and move to America or Germany except the Hebrews."

"Are the Russians a patriotic people?"

"Yes, thoroughly so. There are some elements in Russia which hate the dominant Russians; the Finns and Poles particulary come under this description. I did not go to Poland, but the most beautiful women I saw in St. Petersburg were Poles. I had remarked to an American friend that I was disappointed in the beauty of the women, and he told me one evening to come to a Polish ball, where I would see the finest women of the capital. I went there, and hardly ever saw more dazzling beauty. The Finns were conquered from Sweden by Russia, and they are a highly intellectual race, with gentle natures, who pay more attention to education, and their women are more beautiful. The Russian women have splendid forms, but their faces are not so agreeable. Nearly all the Russians have turned-up noses, and when you see a regiment of Russian soldiers in line you might think they were Irish for that reason. The Russian women have blue eyes and whitish opaque skins. The expression of the average Russian face is sullen and hard; they are not people of much wit or gayety. But there are some things about them very peculiar; for instance, their religion. I never saw such religious people in the world, but, as in all cases where religion is fiercely formal, it does not embrace their morals. I have seen on the floors of their churches officers of their army and nobles kneeling bowed, with their foreheads on the floor, by the hour. When the common people pass the church they take off their hats, and if it should be one hundred feet wide they keep them off until they have gone by. The class of priests is said not to be very intelligent, except the higher dignitaries of the church, who were taken from the noble class. The priests marry, and the government stimulates them to marry. But there lies over all Russia the impress of one-man power. The people themselves, accustomed for generations to understand that there is but one man who rules them, only revolt in a hard, bad way, which rather turns the sympathies of foreigners against them. When I went out there I sincerely sympathized with the people against the despots; but after I got some understanding of the Russian character I began to think that, perhaps, their rulers knew better than we did. If you should have a Russian servant and show him some servility or familiarity, instead of appreciating it he would presume upon it. You can talk to a French waiter, for instance, for moments as if he were your equal, and he will resume his place as a waiter after your conference is over. But the common Russian who serves and waits would become insubordinate if you relented toward him. Therefore, the rule of that realm, somewhat born from the race, is power not unmixed with cruelty. I saw no instances of cruelty myself, but heard of a good many."

"Did not the assassination of the late Czar leave on Russia a deep impression?"

"Yes, it did; but I do not think that Nihilism is the power it assumed at one time to be. I understand that there are still Nihilists in Russia who meet, and that they hardly ever meet but there are secret agents among them. They do not punish them, but keep them under surveilance. Every now and then the government comes down upon them like a bolt of lightning; the offender disappears, and the supposition is that he is taken to Siberia. That is the end of him.

"The police system of Russia is enormous. I doubt whether the ruler of the land himself knows how many persons are in the pay of the police. You see police and military every where. Nearly every large house or hotel in Russia is under the surveilance of a character who supplies it with wood and coal. His business is to watch that house every night; no matter how freezing cold it is, and the thermometer is often forty degrees below zero, you see him sitting out there, and if you undertake to enter, though he may appear to be asleep, he will come forward and look at you to see if you belong to the place. If you visit a friend in Russia he may let you stay ver night without looking at your passport. But next morning he will tell you that if he does not present your passport he will be fined; and you can not leave the country without twenty-four hours' notice before recovering your passport."—Gath, in Cincinnati Enquirer.

FROM FOUR TO SIXTY-FOUR.

A visitor to a school examination in Athens or Rome on a day in the year A. D. 1 might have heard the question asked by the teacher, "How many elements are there in nature?" and the scholars' answer, as found in the books, would have been, "Four—earth, air, fire, and water." That answer was as far as science had reached at that time, but diligent research prosecuted in the intervening ages, has given to the scholar of to-day a different answer. A visitor to a school in London or Paris or Philadelphia would hear the same question replied to by a modern scholar with "sixty-four!" One of the most interesting discoveries made in modern times by delvers into the mysteries of nature is that of "Compound Oxygen." Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, of Philadelphia, the physicians who have been for years treating their patients with this remedy, are glad to satisfy the curious in regard to it, and will mail face to any applicant a copy of their brochure of nearly 200 pages, entitled "Compound Oxygen, its Mode of Action and Results."

Orders for the Compound Oxygen Home Treatment will be filled by H. A. Mathews, 615 Powell Street, San Francisco.

A SUGGESTION TO THE TRAVELING PUBLIC.

Tourists, emigrants and mariners find that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a medicinal safeguard against unhealthful influences, upon which they can implicitly rely, since it prevents the effects of vitiated atmosphere, unaccustomed or unwholesome diet, bad water, or other conditions unfavorable to health. On long voyages, or journeys in latitudes adjacent to the equator, it is especially useful as a preventive of the febrile complaints and disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, which are apt to attack natives of the temperate zone sojourning or traveling in such regions, and it is an excellent protection against the influence of extreme cold, sudden changes of temperature, exposure to damp or extreme fatigue. It not only prevents intermittent and remittent fever, and other diseases of a malarial type, but eradicates them, a fact which has been notorious for years past in North and South America, Mexico, the West Indies, Australia, and other countries.

LIVING ON THE REPUTATION OF OTHERS.

"Take everything that I have but my good name; leave me that and I am content." So said the philosopher. So say all manufacturers of genuine articles to that horde of imitators which thrives upon the reputation of others. The good name of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS has induced many adventurers to put in the market imitations that are not only lacking in the best elements of the genuine article, but are often harmful in their effects. This is not only theft, but might well be called malpractice. Such a thing ought not to be. The public should be warned against these frauds, and, when an external remedy is needed, be sure to insist upon having ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER.

For Weak Women.

Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.: "About the first of September, 1881, my wife was taken with uterine hemorrhage. The best styptics the physician could prescribe did not check it and she got more and more enfeebled. She was troubled with Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, numbness of the limbs, sickness of the stomach and loss of appetite. I purchased a trial bottle of your Vegetable Compound. She said she could discover a salutary effect from the first dose. Now she is comparatively free from the Prolapsus, Stomach's Sickness, &c. The hemorrhage is very much better and is less at the regular periods. Her appetite is restored, and her general health and strength are much improved. We feel that we have been wonderfully benefitted and our hearts are drawn out in gratitude for the same and in sympathy for other sufferers, for whose sakes we allow our names to be used."

JOHNNY'S COMPOSITION ON MEDICINE.

"There Is two kinds of medicine besides the kind you Rub On and the first kind is the Soft Kind which you take with a spoon while A man holds your Head and you kick and Riggle some because it Tastes so and the other kind is the Hard kind which is called Pills and it is the Hardest of the whole because it is so Hard to go Down but it does not make any Difference which kind you Take when you get it Took you wish you Had not for it makes quite a Row in your Stomach and Riots Around."

Evidently Johnny's experience in medicine does not include Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," which are easy to take and do their work quietly and calmly. Neither does it include in the way of "Soft Medicine" Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which though powerful to cure all chronic derangements of the liver and blood, is pleasant to the taste and agreeable in its effects. Unequaled as a remedy for all scrofulous diseases, pimples, blotches, eruptions, ulcers, swelled glands, goitre or thick neck, fever-sores and hip-joint disease.

GOOD NEWS FOR THE AFFLICTED.

A Remarkable Cure of Rheumatism and Catarrh.

Baldwinsville, N. Y.

Pardee Medicine Co.

GENTLEMEN:—About one year ago I chilled my blood and was under the Doctor's care for about six months when I had a counsel of eight physicians and was given up to die. Soon after, a lady friend came to see me and told me about your great Remedy. She said she had been cured by it after having the rheumatism seven years, and that her rheumatism was first brought on by a cold. At this time I was suffering severe pain all through my body and near my heart. The doctors called it only "frozen blood." Through the persuasion of my friend I procured a bottle. I found some relief. Seeing this I procured more and was entirely cured by its use; and what was my surprise and pleasure at finding that I was not only cured of my rheumatism, but the catarrh, which had been troubling me for years, and had become very offensive, had entirely left me.

Wishing your remedy every success, and thanking you very much for my double cure, I remain,

Truly yours,
MRS. LUCY BRONSON.

Rochester, N. Y.

GENTS:—I was confined to my bed with Inflammatory Rheumatism for over a week; was very badly afflicted, suffering from severe pains in my chest, it was going to my heart. On Thursday the 15th I commenced using Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy at 9 o'clock, P. M., and on Saturday the 17th, was able to walk all over the house, and have since continued to improve, and take pleasure in recommending it to all who are afflicted with the terrible disease.

SINGLE-ACTING ENGINE.

TESTIMONIAL.
OFFICE OF THE EUREKA ELECTRIC LIGHT CO., EUREKA, CAL., FEB. 15, 1887.
San Francisco Tool Co., San Francisco, Cal. GENTLEMEN: In answer to yours of Feb. 8, 1887, would say: The four engines purchased from your Company in January, 1886, have been running continuously ever since, from 12 to 16 hours each day, not excepting Sundays, and have never given any trouble; and, furthermore, they have never cost us anything for repairs. I consider them fully as economical as our slide valve engines, which we are using. One of them is a balanced valve, Haskins' make, and the other is the New York Safety Power Company's make. The relation to the cost of keeping your Single-Acting Engine in repair to the cost of keeping the Slide-Valve Engines which were purchased the same month we purchased your engines, and working under the same conditions, is, that while there has been no expense in either material or labor on the engines furnished by your Company, the expense of keeping the Slide-Valve Engines in good running order, has cost, on an average, $8 to $12 per month for each engine.
A portion of the time the Single-Acting Engines have been run by the fireman, and I can recommend your engines to parties that are not close to a machine shop, and do not want to keep an engineer and fireman, as with your engine all the attention they require is to fill the oil cups once every 16 hours, and turn the steam on and shut it off. The balance of the time the engine takes care of itself.
Yours truly,
A. A. OSBORN, Superintendent.

THE LEBEL RIFLE.

Descriptive Account of the New Arm of the French Army.

The Lebel rifle, as the new arm is called, was invented by Lieutenant-Colonel Lebel, principal of the artillery school at Chalons. Its remarkable qualities are lightness, long range and extraordinary penetrating power. According to the scientific researches of the mathematician, Prof. Hebler, it was supposed that the absolutely perfect army rifle should be a weapon with a caliber of precisely seven millimeters. The Lebel rifle has not so small a caliber, but offers the nearest approach to it yet made—viz.: Eight millimeters. With this caliber the advantages are: a lighter cartridge; a greater penetrating power, and a much less liability of the missile to be deviated from its course by a strong wind.

The ball is so covered with steel and brass, as to enable it to preserve its form and to follow precisely the grooves of the barrel. Its initial velocity is exactly 100 meters per second greater than that of the Gras rifle, which had an initial velocity of 450 meters, while the Lebel boasts a velocity of 540 meters. It revolves upon itself 5,000 times per second—always traveling point first. At a distance of 1,800 meters its fire is as fatal as within a lesser distance; and as the line of the projectile is almost perfectly straight, extraordinary hits can be made at immense ranges. To obviate the shock of recoil consequent upon so prodigious an expelling force, a special powder has been invented by Colonel Bruigere, which detonates progressively without smoke and with comparatively little noise. The shooter feels the weapon push—does not feel a sudden and painful jar. Three wooden shields placed at about twenty-five yards apart were easily pierced in a straight line by one rifleshot—the ball traveling on five hundred meters further without changing its course to strike the outlying target aimed at precisely in the center. The movable breech piece is shorter than in the Gras rifle, but offers a greater resistance and the recoil follows the axis of the weapon.

On finding themselves in possession of so extraordinary an arm, it was for some time a question with the military authorities whether or not to adopt it in its simplest form, as the best of single-shot breech loaders. But as Austria is adopting the Mannlicher repeater, Italy the Vitali repeater, Germany the Mauser magazine gun, it seemed necessary to make the Lebel a repeater also; as troops armed with a single shot rifle only, however good, would easily become demoralized by the mere conviction that they were face to face with enemies armed with magazine guns.—English Paper.

A TRULY WISE WOMAN.

How a Minneapolis Housekeeper Manages to Keep Her Servants.

She pays them liberally and promptly, recognizing the fact, true the world over, that the employer who beats down wages always suffers from the inferior quality of work done, and from lack of interest on the part of the employed.

Having a practical knowledge of the business of housekeeping, she can not be deceived, and knows how to direct the work properly; and, while insisting kindly, but firmly, that it shall be properly performed, she never fails to give a word of praise for all that merits her approval. She never meddles with her servants' particular ways of doing work so long as good results are produced. She doesn't think it necessary to substitute her way for every body else's way.

She never lowers herself by scolding. Her servants are respectful to her because she is respectful to them. No familiarity is tolerated or attempted. The private domestic life of the family is never intruded upon. They have their own apartments, eat by themselves and prefer to do so. And yet the mistress is not unmindful of their physical and mental well-being. She has fitted up a comfortable bedroom, with a good spring bed and toilet necessities, and adjoining, a cozy little sitting-room, with a stove, table, rocking chairs, etc., where they can rest as women need to. And several times a week they are invited to the family sitting-room for half an hour in the evening, where she teaches them to read English, they being Scandinavians.

She realizes that, as human beings, they have desires for social companionship, and allows them to have a reasonable amount of company. She allows them as many church privileges as possible, and gives them a street-car fare once or twice a week. She takes a kindly personal interest in them, helping them to select their clothing and get it made neatly.

"Too much trouble to take for servants," is it? Well, perhaps it is; and yet she contrives to do it in the intervals of a busy life. She says that it isn't a quarter the trouble that it would be to change servants every six weeks. Those girls love her, and look up to her, and work faithfully for her, and couldn't be driven away from her.—Minneapolis Tribune.

WESTERN ENTERPRISE.

The New and Peculiar Business Built Up in New York by a Western Man.

Western energy and dash was never better demonstrated than in the case of a young man who came to New York about a month ago to seek his fortune. His capital would hardly have been sufficient to pay a two months' board bill. He answered innumerable advertisements, and visited a number of business houses in hope of securing employment; but all his efforts in this direction were in vain. He was about to despair, and finally was trying to concoct some way by which he could secure transportation home, when he chanced to visit a place where the wax images of some of the famous people of the country are on exhibition. There he was seized with an idea that has resulted in his building up a paying business, and which promises before long to be lucrative. He noticed how interested the people were as they viewed the images of General Sherman, Colonel Ingersoll and others more or less famous, when this thought struck him:

"If these people are willing to pay fifty cents to look at wax images they would certainly pay that or a larger amount to see the originals. Why, almost every day I could show them fifty men whose names are a household word by taking them to the corridors of the leading hotels."

He saw one party of gentlemen, evidently from the country, very much interested in the image of a man who can be seen almost any hour of the day in the corridor of the Fifth Avenue Hotel. He made bold to ask them if they would like to have a number of flesh and blood distinguished men pointed out to them. They were delighted with the idea, and immediately started off with him to visit the hotel corridors. The young Westerner had traveled considerably, so that he knew a number of prominent faces. He was extremely fortunate this day in meeting a number of distinguished men, and when he got through with his party was liberally rewarded. This inspired him with confidence in the practibility of his scheme and he resolved to make a business of it.

The next day he had cards printed stating the nature of his business, and went at it in a methodical manner. At first he looked for his customers from among the people who visit the place where the wax images are exhibited and among the second-class hotels. His business now is fairly known among the hotel employes, and it is not infrequent for customers to come to him.

"I am now making a good deal more than I could as a clerk," said the young man, "and, besides, I think there is a good future for me in this business. I have not opened an office yet, but I expect to before long. It is certainly a very interesting vocation, but it has to be worked in a systematic manner, like all other businesses. You can only find men around the hotels in the morning and evening, so that during the middle of the day I spend my time looking up custom. The morning, though, is decidedly the best time to find notables. You can usually find fifty to one hundred persons of National reputation in the hour's walk through the corridors. A good time to see theatrical people gathered about cafes is in the afternoon.

"There are a lot of prominent men who know my business and are generally around at certain hours so that I may be able to point them out. There is a distinguished Congressman at the Hoffman House who passes regularly every morning and evening for my customers. I find that nearly all the public men like to have people look at them. Not long ago there was a prominent United States Senator stopping at one of the hotels and some one made him aware of the fact that I was exhibiting him to several customers. Shortly after the Senator entrapped me in a conversation and began to pump me about what my customers had said and thought about him. Their remarks had been complimentary, so I told the Senator what had been said. He was delighted and gave me five dollars for my trouble. He also told me confidentially that whenever I had customers in the hotel and he should not be around I might send for him, and he would, as a matter of accommodation to me, respond.

"The theatrical people regard it as an excellent advertisement of themselves, and many of them are very glad to have me introduce them to my customers. The fact that I have the entree into nearly all the theaters shows best how they appreciate my services. For a business of only a month, I think I have done well, but it is yet in its infancy. Soon I expect I will have two or three assistants. Of course as I prosper I expect opposition."—N. Y. Cor. Washington Post.

Sound is much increased by the echoes in a closed vault. In a cave of the Pantheon, the guide by striking the flap of his great-coat makes a noise like the report of a cannon. The same phenomenon is found in the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky. In the cave of Smellin, near Viborg, in Finland, by throwing in a live animal terrible noises are heard. Pliny tells of a similar cave in Dalmatia where the falling of a stone raised a perfect storm. Fingal's Cave, in the island of Staffa, presents another remarkable phenomenon. The end of this cave is dark and gloomy, and may be compared to the chancel of a church, while the basaltic columns may be likened to the organ pipes. At the extremity of the grotto, and near the level of the water, is a small opening whence come harmonious sounds which are produced by the sea rising and falling.—Nature.

HEROIC GARIBALDI.

Great Physical Strength, Bravery and Magnanimity of the "Liberator."

What impressed me most about Garibaldi was the immense triceps or shoulder muscles he had. They were just like two half cocoanuts sticking up underneath his white Mexican mantle. From Heenan and Morrissey to Mace (Sayers had a remarkably small arm) I never saw any thing like it. It would have made two of theirs. And the saber he used! Two of the Life Guards' blades forged into one would just have made it. Many a time have I seen that awful saber sweeping right, left, right, left, like clockwork, as he mowed down the enemy like grass, seated on his old white charger, leaving a "lane" (that is the only word) for us who followed him closely. "Avant! avant!" rang from his lips all the while, and his trumpet voice rose high above the loudest artillery fire. His strength was simply Herculean, and was only surpassed by General Dunne. As an instance of Garibaldi's enormous strength, I remember late one night leaving the Caffee di Europa, in Naples, with some brother officers, and seeing the General just passing on foot with only one attendant. We followed him, as he was going toward an unlighted and dangerous part of the city, which swarmed with Borboni—ex-soldiers, sbirri, lazzaroni in the pay of Francis II. He was going to visit one of his dying soldiers, a boy of seventeen. We had not long to wait; like lightning two men sprang at him, right and left, simultaneously, knife in hand. Ere their blades, raised to strike, could fall, Garibaldi had each one by the throat, raised high in air to the full extent of his arms. He then knocked them together two or three times and let them drop on the stones. You may guess that our swords were out. But no! The great hero said: "Leave them alone; the poor fools have had their lesson." That was the kind of man—the demi-god—that he was; just as he was when the tyrant Rosas, in South America, hung him up by the thumbs in face of a blazing tropical sun for four mortal hours. That night Garibaldi escaped. In two days he had Rosas in his power, and when some of his men, many of whom were vaqueros and bull-fighters, drew their long navajas, and were actually—such is their brutified nature—proposing to skin Rosas alive, Garibaldi not only furnished him with an escort of his own body-guard to the frontier, but even collected together every horse, bullock and single article that had been looted from Rosas, amounting in specie and jewels alone to several thousand pounds, and had him and his immense wealth conveyed to a place of safety. The Neapolitans realized this side of his character to such an extent that I have seen whole battalions of them actually kneel down in the dust as "The Liberator" passed. He had only one formula for them, roaring out: "Rise! that is the attitude of slaves, not of freemen!"—Pall Mall Gazette.

MIMETIC INSECTS.

Butterflies Whose Leaf-Like Wings Imitate the Foliage That Shelters Them.

There is a certain butterfly in the Malay Archipelago (its learned name, if any body wishes to be formally introduced, is Kallima paralekta) which always rests among dead or dry leaves, and has itself leaf-like wings, all spotted over at intervals with wee speckles to imitate the tiny spots of fungi on the foliage it resembles. The well-known stick and leaf insects from the same rich neighborhood in like manner exactly mimic the twigs and leaves of the forest among which they lurk; some of them look for all the world like little bits of walking bamboo, while others appear in all varieties of hue, as if opening buds and full-blown leaves and pieces of yellow foliage sprinkled with the tints and molds of decay had of a sudden raised themselves erect upon six legs and begun incontinently to perambulate the Malayan woodlands like vegetable Frankensteins in all their glory. The larva of one such deceptive insect, observed in Nicaragua by sharp-eyed Mr. Belt, appeared at first sight like a mere fragment of the moss on which it rested, its body being all prolonged into little thread-like green filaments, precisely imitating the foliage around it. Once more, there are common flies which secure protection for themselves by growing into the counterfeit presentment of wasps or hornets, and so obtaining immunity from the attacks of birds or animals. Many of these curiously mimetic insects are banded with yellow and black in the very image of their stinging originals, and have their tails sharpened, in terrorem, into a pretended sting, to give point and verisimilitude to the deceptive resemblance. More curious still, certain South American butterflies of a perfectly inoffensive and edible family mimic in every spot and line of color sundry other butterflies of an utterly unrelated and fundamentally dissimilar type, but of so disagreeable a taste as never to be eaten by birds or lizards.—Cornhill Magazine.

WORKED BOTH WAYS.

A party of convivial owls, typical western gamblers most of them, sat in a sporting resort in this place recently and filled the brief hiatus between the closing of the last night faro game and the opening of the first morning one by exchanging professional reminiscences.

"I saw an item in a newspaper the other day," said a Colorado veteran, "about some fellow beating fly loo by soaking his lump of sugar in a chemical that scared off the insects. You know in fly loo each man lays a piece of sugar on the table, and the first one that gets a fly looses the drinks or stakes. Last summer I was at the Arcade in Denver, and one day a smooth looking eastern chap walks in an suggests fly loo. We each got a lump of the bartender and went to work. It was first fly lose, for a dollar a shot. I got the first fly and the second, and also the next eight. By that time it dawned on me that he must have doctored his lump, for there wasn't a fly that would go within a foot of it. I was pretty sore, but just then a brilliant idea struck me, and I proposed that we try ten more goes at $10 apiece. He said all right, but when we got the money up I insisted that the rule change and first fly win instead of lose. To my surprise he agreed to that, too. Well, to make a long story short, the flies swarmed all over his lump for ten straight times, but nary one came to see me. When he put the last stakes in his pocket I was the wildest man in Colorado. I knew I'd been robbed, but didn't see how it was done. Finally I called the stranger aside and said:

"My friend, don't suppose that I'm impudent or inquisitive, but I have a curiosity to know how you wound me up. If you will put me on, I'll promise not to work the game in your territory and buy a bottle of wine."

"He laughed and said: 'Well, I don't mind telling you that I put a drop of stuff on my lump that will make a fly hunt the next county mighty quick.'

"'I guessed that much, but how about the last time we played?'

"'Oh, I supposed you'd want to switch, so I just changed lumps with you.'"—El Paso Letter in New York Sun.

Posthumous Inspiration.

"I am so busy," said young Softly Sophomore. "I have no time to think." "I can let you have plenty of time," said the professor, coldly, "but isn't there something else you need to do thinking with?" And long, long after recitation, when it was hours too late, young Softly bethought him that he should have said, "Yes, but you have none of that to spare, professor." Thus oft our brightest thoughts and happiest inspirations side track and wait for a signal and fail to get there.—Burdette.

Siamese English.

An old Siamese teacher in trying to master English wrote a list of definitions, from which we select for the entertainment of our young readers the following: Wig: hypocrite hair. Flattery: a good kind of curse word. Whisky: sin water. Gold: a very good thing. Blew: a wind verb. Kick: a foot verb. Bow: a salute verb. Hop: a frog verb. Liar: a bad adjective of boy. Modesty: a good adjective of girl. Vine: a string tree. Cunning: a good word of philosophy man. Daughter: a girl son. Bullet: a son of a gun. Sponge: water foam. Angel: God's boy. Large: an adjective of preacher. Preach: a missionary verb. Comfort: word of mother to crying child. Adulterative: a bad adjective of lying man. Admonition: word of Bible.—Syracuse Christian Advocate.

A Hindoo Idea.

Lord Rosebery, who married a wealthy Jewess of the Rothschild family, once took her to India with him. They attended a dinner in Calcutta at which the duchess of Manchester was seated next to the rajah of Mozufferungger. The rajah asked: "And this Lord Rosebery of your great country—has he brought his wives with him?" "S-sh!" exclaimed the duchess, blushing scarlet. "That's Lady Rosebery over there, next the viceroy!" The oriental regarded Lady Rosebery for some moments, and then remarked with a sigh: "Poor young man! I hope they allow him a nicer one at home!"—Chicago Times.

The Age of Slang.

"I just think it's shameful the way Sally Spittlejig spits slang," said a Sac City maiden to a Sioux City miss. "My! If I twirled my talker as she does, my blooming old snoozer of a dad would tan my duds until the dust was thicker'n fleas in fly time."

"You betcher your brass, and serve you right," replied the Sioux City miss. "My parients are sunflowers of the same hue, and if I should make a raw crack in conversation they'd thrash the rosy cussedness out of my angelic anatomy quicker'n old Cleveland can bust a bill with his veto."—Odeboit (Iowa) New North.

COTTON DRESS FABRICS.

The Exceptionally Complete Display of Satines, Ginghams and Crepe Boucle.

The display of cotton dress goods for the coming season is exceptionally fine and complete. The French satines emulate the foulard and India silks in appearance, in the colors and patterns as well as in luster, and in many instances can hardly be distinguished from the more expensive fabrics. The patterns are small; cubes, dots, interlinked rings, ovoids and small flowers, or parts of flowers conventionalized in a solid color, and set rather closely together on a ground of contrasting color. There are also the favorite stripes and bars, some of them quite wide, and having various small quaint designs in white or a contrasting color on them, alternating with a solid stripe in any one of the fashionable colors.

Heliotrope, in various shades, beige, tan, dark brown, dark green, Nile-green, porcelain blue, maize or buff, several shades of gray, light pink, and a lovely and peculiar shade of dark red are shown in the satines, and each one serves as a ground for a pattern in any one of the others. With most of the figured satines, a plain satine of the same color as the ground is furnished for combination.

Beautiful French ginghams, almost as fine as silk, are shown in all the above colors; and, in addition to the familiar checks and plaids, there are various novel effects that are very charming. Chenille ginghams have perpendicular stripes formed of a single thread of parti-colored cotton chenille on the usual plaided ground, which may be in two or three shades of the same color, or in contrasting colors. Bourette ginghams have checks and broken plaids of medium size, of the same general style as the above, with bourette threads of another color running lengthwise only. Lace ginghams have fine lace stripes, like revering, usually in a cluster of three, with an intermediate stripe of solid color on which are small flowers embroidered in bright tints. Cable-cord gingham has broken plaids formed by heavy cords running each way, usually of darker and lighter shades of the same color as the ground. This is reversible, being woven exactly the same on both sides. Tinsel ginghams are in small broken plaids, sometimes in two or three shades of the same color, and white, with secondary plaids formed of bayadere stripes of tinsel crossing perpendicular stripes of cotton chenille in bright colors. These are warranted to be fast colors, and the tinsel will not tarnish either in wearing or laundering. Pongee ginghams are of the same general texture and appearance as the silk pongees, and have knotted threads of a bright color at close intervals each way, which form small checks.

A special novelty in cotton goods is crepe boucle, which comes in all light colors, blue, pink, cream, ecru and maize, and has perpendicular stripes formed of coarse, knotty threads, single and in clusters of three, on a crape-like ground of the same color.—Demorest's Monthly.

SCIENTIFIC SPANKING.

Rubber Hose as a Substitute for the Disciplinary Rattan.

No one need tell me that the negro race has no inventive powers. Our colored schools at times have been very unruly, and the teachers have often been obliged to resort to the rattan, which some of them wielded with telling effect, the superintendent of public schools being continually besieged by complaints from parents of the vigor which this instrument of correction had been applied to the sable cuticle of their offspring. Of late these complaints have ceased, while the discipline of the schools have greatly improved. Some of us who had no belief in the efficacy of moral suasion investigated the matter and discovered the cause of the change. Instead of the usual rattan the colored teachers had provided themselves with short sections of rubber hose, and as an implement to exhort the impenitent it was crowned with magnificent success. The youth to be reasoned with is laid across a chair and the preceptor proceeds to titillate his epidermis with the new implement of correction. The effect of this operation is to extract howls from the culprit far exceeding in energy any which responded to the gentle persuasion of the rattan, and to cause his ebon skin to blush like the morn. But within a short time after the application no trace of the punishment remained, and the suffering African was no longer able to touch the hearts of the School Board by an exhibition of the marks of correction upon his dusky person. Beyond a strong desire to partake of his frugal repast from the mantelpiece, no ill effects remained. This excellent mode of correction has been adopted by a number of teachers in our white schools, and the sensibilities of parents need no longer be shocked by viewing the marks of the rattan upon the tender cuticle of their erring offspring.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

—A experienced poultryman thinks that the cause of failures in the many attempts to keep fowls in large numbers is due to the lack of care. Yet the hens will pay five times as much profit in proportion to labor and capital invested, as the cows.—Prairie Farmer

FIRST-CLASS BUTTER.

Suggestions for Those Who Wish to Produce a Strictly Perfect Article.

One of the good things about the drift of dairying is a tendency to discard the holding of butter for a rise in price and sell it fresh. A great advance would be attained if it were possible for the maker and the consumer to live "from hand to mouth," so to speak. Then there would be no accumulation of butter in the market to get strong, "off flavor," and rancid. The fancy quotations are for butter not over ten days old; and when one hears of "eighty cents per pound" it means butter made and delivered twice a week.

Every butter-maker knows that the fancy in flavor of butter is a sort of will-o'-the-wisp, and it is doubtful if this exquisite flavor can be depended on over two weeks at the most; and as it is this fleeting flavor that brings ten cents extra per pound, dairymen must understand the necessity of shipping butter as fast as made. A fresh-made butter, with dainty flavor, must always be sold in preference to a butter made three months before it is put on the market.

The dairyman can seize upon this very fact as a trade-mark. No bogus butter can be made with this delicate aroma, and the consumer once put in possession of this fact can always protect himself from the counterfeit butter. The most patent damage done to the dairy product is the fear of the consumer that he will have bogus goods thrust upon him, and he is suspicious, and we are from this very fact eating less butter each day. The genuine butter, unless conspicuously fine, is looked upon with reserve, and to-day common butter in the market is actually classed with the bogus. This gives the dairyman who chooses the chance to make the finest of butter and supply consumers direct, and allow the bogus producer no chance to come in with his compound.

We may also in time see the advantage of salting butter far less than we now do, and give this delicate aroma of fresh-made butter a more conspicuous place. If we would churn the cream at the point of mild acidity, thoroughly wash out the buttermilk with weak brine, and then salt the butter in a brine-bath, instead of working dry salt into the butter, the consumer would soon learn that butter has a flavor of its own, independent of salt and buttermilk, and when these two are a little less conspicuous the real luxury of butter is discovered, and when this occurs, it is the flavor that will be paid for. Butter, as simply so much grease, is a dear article of food, but as a table luxury, exquisite in flavor, and perfect in grain, it is worth its advance cost.

We are also fast finding out that butter needs only all the strong brine it will absorb while in the granular stage to give it keeping properties. When free of buttermilk—as it may be if it is washed out—a coating of liquid salt about each little globule, is all that can ever be done in the way of salt adding to the keeping of butter. Then this brine will also fill all the minute spaces between the globules, and keep out the air. Such butter is perfection, and the desire for more than one-third of an ounce of salt to the pound of butter is an acquired habit of taste—the exchange of butter-flavor for the sharper flavor of salt.—Cor. N. Y. Witness.

MONKEYS IN INDIA.

Their Shrewdness Surpassed Only by Their Incontrollable Greed for Corn.

I remember once coming across a Hindoo who was piously scattering corn for the monkeys, about a hundred of which were gathered round him snatching up the grain with greedy hands and cuffing soundly any monkey that poached on his neighbor's share. Swarms of other monkeys were sitting on the trees and banks close by, with faces of rueful resignation, looking wistfully at the feast before them; but the man explained to us that they belonged to a different caste, and would be half killed if they attempted to join the party. One huge fellow we noticed particularly, who sat as near as he dared and looked on, but did not try to pick up so much as an outlying grain, although we were told he was "a noted wrestler."

In certain camping-grounds the monkeys were perfect pests, frequently stealing the servants' dinners, and even snatching food out of their hands, or carrying off their copper cooking-pots, rushing up a tree with them, and throwing them down after eating the contents. The servants would often come and complain of their misdoings, but redress there was none; wide as an Indian civilian's jurisdiction is, it does not extend over the monkey-world.

The natives have an ingenious way of catching monkeys, so simple that it may with truth be said that the monkey catches himself. A narrow-mouthed jar is filled with corn, and accidentally, of course, left on the ground. The ever-watchful monkeys quickly take note of this, and no sooner is the owner of the jar out of sight than they steal up to inspect and discuss their windfall. Having satisfied themselves that there is no trap, one of them thrusts in his arm and snatches a handful of corn. He then finds that the mouth of the jar is too narrow to let him withdraw his doubled fist, but he never thinks of dropping the corn, and out rushes the owner from behind a tree and treacherously slips a noose around the victim's neck.—London Field.

IRRIGATION NOTES.

The establishment of the new irrigation district will add one million dollars to the assessed valuation of property in the county inside of five years. No good citizen will oppose a measure of such great benefit to the public as this.

The irrigation law is so framed that the largest land owner in the district must pay as much tax per acre for his land as the smallest land owner will have to pay. There is no escape from this. Small land holders in the district have more to gain than large proprietors in proportion to their possessions.

It is of vital interest to the whole people of the state that the waters of the streams should never fall into the hands of monopolists. The ownership of the water is equivalent to the ownership of the land, and whoever owns the land will control all legislation and political power in the State. The establishment of irrigation districts will be certain to make small holdings the rule, and thus keep the power of the State in the hands of the people.

Nobody will oppose the irrigation district except those who are against all public improvements. There a few men in all parts of the State who would prefer to see the country have no other business than some mining camps and the country used for no other purpose than grazing cattle. The vast improvements made in the State during the past few years, the fertilization of desert land, the increase in wealth and population, have all been accomplished against the wish of the class of men above referred to.

SATURDAY, MAY 28.....1887.

T. C. Boland was up from Keeler during the week.

The new sampling works at Keeler will be completed in a few days.

L. A. James, of Bishop Creek, was in town a day or two this week.

O. I. Mairs is putting up a new warehouse back of his hotel.

The first cutting of alfalfa is nearly ready around Independence; the crop will be a heavy one.

The Veterans will celebrate Memorial Day at Bishop Creek on Monday.

The usual visitation of sheep has set in. About half a million come to the valley each year.

A good deal of ore is being shipped from Cerro Gordo. Teams are hauling steadily from Darwin and Lookout.

A large amount of ore is collected at the furnace at Lookout; everything is in readiness for lighting up and a long run will soon be made.

The Fourth of July celebration at Independence will be the grandest affair of the kind ever held in the county.

A special train has been chartered to run from Hawthorne and intermediate points to Independence on the Fourth of July.

A large force of men and horses, with suitable machinery, are now at work on the upper end of the big canal for the irrigation district.

Work was begun a few days ago on a new warehouse for N. Rhine. The building will be quite large and will be located just east of the store.

There will be ripe peaches at Independence about the middle of June. Mr. Baxter is likely to have the first in the market. Prune trees are very heavily loaded; so are apricots and nectarines.

Work is progressing rapidly on a large new quartzmill to be run by water, at Virginia City. The Enterprise says it looks like old times to see so many men at work pushing along one enterprise.

The citizens of Lone Pine are building a flume to carry water into the town for irrigating purposes. A large quantity of water has been allowed to go to waste above the town which will be utilized by means of this flume.

There was a large congregation at the the M. E. Church last Sunday evening. Said a young man present, "I like to listen to Mr. De La Matyr; he does not preach at us, but talks to us." The church was adorned with flowers, and these, with the good music of the choir, were doubtless part of the attractions.

The Register of the Land Office was occupied several days this week in taking testimony in a contested land location near Lone Pine. A large number of witnesses were examined and, the testimony being reduced to writing, the proceedings were tedious. Final judgment in the case will be given at Washington, and the result may not be known for a long time.

Having in our official capacity as members of the Plymouth, Pa., Hospital Committee, been asked to test and prove the effective of many different articles to be used as disinfectants in sick-rooms and as preventives of infectious fevers, report that Darbys Prophylactic Fluid has been thoroughly tested during the recent Typhoid epidemic in this place. It proved most efficacious in staying the spread of the Fever.

Mining Sale.

S. A. Densmore has sold a silver mining claim at San Carlos to parties in San Francisco. The claim is about two miles above Independence station. Mr. H. H. Russell of Benton, was the agent for the purchasers. It is expected that a force of men will be at work on the claim within a few days.

Cloud Burst.

Last Saturday there was a cloud burst in the canyon between Darwin and Keeler. Mr. and Mrs. John Barnes were on their way from Keeler to Darwin and saw the great rush of water coming down the canyon, but fortunately at a place where there was a chance for them to turn out of the road and get on the higher ground in time to escape being caught in the flood.

Sad End.

A press dispatch last Saturday brought the news of the death of Isaac Harris, at Santa Cruz. Mr. Harris was a sufferer from constitutional melancholia, one of the sorest afflictions that ever human being was troubled with. When the light of reason was obscured by this dreadful malady he destroyed himself, as other men of great ability have done. Isaac Harris retired from business at Independence at the beginning of the present year, and went to San Francisco. He had gained quite a fortune, was yet but in the prime of middle life, and might with reason expect to live to a good old age. But when business cares no longer occupied his mind the malady came upon him unchecked. He was at Santa Cruz at the time of his death, accompanied by his son, J. C. Harris. In his room at a hotel the unfortunate man opened his veins with a pocket knife and was found soon after by his son in a dying condition.

Marble.

At the marble quarry recently a block of pure marble was taken out that would weigh over eighty tons. The saws are now at work cutting up this block for market. Behind where this block was taken out stands a ledge twenty feet high, and as far as can be seen, without a seam. The opening of this ledge will, it is believed, supply all the large blocks that may be needed for a century to come. The third layer has been cut through and a seam found at a depth of ten feet. Some fear was felt that no such seam would be found, thus making quarrying more expensive, but that is now dispelled. Some blocks of yellow and moss-agate marble have recently been sawed and both are beautiful. The fern-like figures in the moss-agate marble are from three to four inches in length. A car-load of marble was shipped to San Francisco this morning. A retail business will be opened at the mill in a few days to supply the home market with everything that may be wanted in the way of marble work.

Mining Prospects.

Some very good mining prospects are being opened in new ground in the Beveridge district, in the Inyo mountains. In one of these claims, the True Blue, owned by C. Maysan and others, of Lone Pine, the ore carries $296 per ton in silver. A shipment of the ore was made a few days ago. Another claim, called the Big Treasure, is owned by the same parties. This is located not far from the White Hill mine but on the other side of the ridge. A sample of thirteen tons of this ore was shipped recently; it goes $26 50 per ton in silver and 69 per cent. lead. The vein is large and easily mined. This claim gives strong evidence of developing a very large ore body.

161 acres well improved with good dwelling and out-houses, farming machinery, horses, cattle, etc. Located in the most desirable portion of the valley. Good water title. For further particulars inquire of

Notice of an Election.

State of California, County of Inyo, Clerk o the Board of Supervisors office.

Whereas, the Board of Supervisors did, at a regular meeting held in said County and State on May 5th 1887, establish an Irrigation District No. 1, of Inyo County, and fix the boundaries of the same according to an act of the General Assembly of the State of California, entitled, "An Act to provide for the organization and government of Irrigation Districts and to provide for the acquisition of water and other property, and for the distribution of water thereby for irrigation purposes," approved March 7t., 1887, and directing the Clerk thereof to give notice as in said Act provided:

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the boundaries of said district are as follows:

Beginning at the quarter section corner on the line between sections two and eleven in township No. eleven, south, of range No. thirty-four, east, M. D. TWO VETERANS MEET.

One of Them Learns That He Was Dead and Nearly Buried Years Ago.

"I had the greatest kind of a surprise a few days ago," said Colonel James Armstrong of this place, a veteran of the Mexican war, "and although I was glad to have it it has rather broken the thread of my reminiscences of the past forty years.

"You see I went to Mexico with the Second Regiment of Pennsylvania volunteers, being a Lieutenant in company E. One of the privates in the Company was a young man named William R. Shields. He was from Greensburg, too. On the march from Perota to Puebla Shields became very sick. When we reached Puebla we took possession of an old monastery there, and used it as a hospital. When we put Shields in the hospital he was unconscious, and we all felt that it was only a matter of a few days when we would have to bury him. Sure enough, one day the surgeon, a young chap from North Carolina, reported that Shields was dead. We laid him out on a sort of catafalque on one of the monastery porches, having placed the body in a coffin. A detail was ordered to dig his grave and attend to the interment. We had plenty of time and could do such things decently just then. While poor Shield's grave was being dug one of the old monks of the monastery came to the coffin, which wasn't closed yet, and began to mumble prayers over the body. The monk was in the middle of his mumbling, when all of a sudden he threw up his hands and exclaimed in Spanish:

"'This man is not dead!'

"Of course we thought the poor monk was crazy, but we couldn't quiet his frantic protestations that we were about to bury a live man, and his appeal to be permitted to have the body carried to his apartment so that he could experiment on it were so earnest that to satisfy the noisy old chap we had the body, coffin, and all carried to the monk's room. We thought we'd let him satisfy himself that Shields was about as good a dead man as he had ever seen, and then fetch the body back and go on with the funeral. If he hadn't happened to come along, though, just then, Shields would have been under ground within the next twenty minutes.

"While the monk was experimenting with the body, the command received orders to leave Puebla at once and march to the City of Mexico. In the hurry and bustle of preparing for the march we had no time to think about the funeral, and left Shields' body to be disposed of by the monks. The regiment went to the Mexican capital, and many and many a time after that wondered how long those monks kept the corpse before they gave up and buried it.

"Well, the other day I was in Kuhn's law office, when a hearty-looking old gentleman came in.

"'Ah, Colonel,' says Kuhn to me, 'here's another Mexican veteran. Colonel Armstrong,' says he, 'shake hands with Mr. Shields—William R. Shields, of Connellsville. He was in Mexico, too.'

"The name rather startled me of course, only for a moment.

"'Shields?' says I. 'I had a man in my company named William R. Shields,' says I. 'Company E, Second Pennsylvania volunteers.'

"'I was the man,' says he. 'That was my regiment and company. The Lieutenant's name was Armstrong,' says he.

"'Well,' says I, considerably staggered, 'if you're the William Shields that I mean, the last time I saw you you were dead and in your coffin waiting to be buried, forty years ago this spring, at Puebla.'"

"'I was very sick at Puebla,' says Mr. Shields, staggered considerably himself, 'but I have no recollection of having been dead and coffined.'

"'Of course not,' says I, 'but you must have heard about it.'

"'Never until now,' says he.

"Well, then, I've got a nice piece of news for you,' says I; 'but if any one had told me forty years ago, as I stood looking at you in your coffin, after detailing men men to dig your grave, that I would be telling you of it to-day, I'm afraid I wouldn't have believed him.'

"And I up and told the old gentleman the story of his death and interrupted funeral. He was as much surprised to hear it as I was to see him alive and in the flesh. It seems he had come to under the care and doctoring of the monks, but they hadn't said a word to him about his having been dead and in his coffin, or if they had he didn't know it, as they talked only Spanish. By the time he was able to join his regiment the City of Mexico was taken and the war virtually over. In the general rejoicing his return was never noticed particularly, and no one happened to mention it to him that he had been dead. So he was ignorant of how close he came to being buried that day in Puebla, for all these forty years, until I happened to meet him the other day, and he has lived right over here in Connellsville, too, ever since he came back from Mexico.—*Greensburg (Pa.) Saving Money.

"But don't they cave in?"

"Sometimes."

"And they must kill people who happen to be under them?"

"Yes, but if the streets weren't graded it would kill the horses."—Omaha World.

Asking Impossibilities.

Photographer—Certainly, sit right down.

"No, not in this; this is a bonnet. I will come this afternoon with the other; it's my theatre hat, you know."

"I am very sorry, Miss, but my landscape camera is out of order."—Omaha World.

Not of Common Clay.

Miss Upperten—Oh, by the way, dear, I am going to send you an invitation to my party. It is to be next week.

Miss Sassiety—Party! Why, love, you surprise. Is it possible you are not keeping lent?

Miss Upperten—Oh, no. It's so common.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

HAWAIIAN LEPERS.

Sugar-King Spreckels Gives Some Facts About the Horrible Disease.

Claus Spreckels, the man who is supposed to own the Hawaiian Islands among other little things, is here, and is one of the most noted men in town. Spreckels is a stout man, with white hair and beard. His most striking feature is his eyes, and such eyes they are. They are gray and blue at times, and seem to look right through you. He speaks with a slight German accent and uses gestures freely to emphasize his remarks. He said to the correspondent: "I am at a loss to understand the apathy of the people of the United States towards the Hawaiian Islands. Naturally in the course of time they would become a part of the domain of this country, and they will, too, if we would only take some interest in the great properties owned by Americans there. It is the most glorious climate in the world. The temperature never varies more than eight degrees and the soil will grow every thing that is known to the earth. The people are splendid specimens and of excellent disposition."

"How about leprosy?"

"I can tell you as much about leprosy as any other man, but really I do not pretend to understand it. The lepers are banished to an island, from whence they are never allowed to return. No body has ever been able to learn how leprosy originated or how it can be cured. It appears in the most curious ways, and leaves men and women untouched who have suffered the greatest exposure. The most striking instance of this fact is the case of the present Queen of Hawaii. The King is her second husband. Her first husband was a leper, and her two children by him both died by the horrible disease, and yet she is a perfectly healthy woman. Nobody knows how leprosy is communicated. The most eminent authorities who have looked into the subject contend that it is not contagious. Several years ago a white man was condemned to death for a murder which he had committed. The authorities allowed him to choose between being executed or passing into the hands of a noted German physician for experimental purposes. The criminal cheerfully chose the latter. He was inoculated time and time again with leprosy, but the disease had no effect upon him, and to-day he is as healthy a man as there is on the islands. Leprosy does not often attack the white race, for out of the thousands of cases there are to-day only about a half dozen Caucasians. These are facts beyond dispute. In my judgment England will take some very aggressive measures to obtain possession of the islands before many years. The native race is rapidly dying out, and it is a question of a very short time before the country will pass under the control of a foreign power."—Washington Cor. Boston Traveler.

FANCY AND IDEAL.

The Wide and Frequently Misunderstood Difference Between the Two.

Having a fancy is one thing. Perceiving an ideal is quite another thing. To fancy that one, of whom we know but little, is faultless, or that he is above all ordinary planes of conduct and thought and feeling, is to deceive ourselves, and is to prepare the way for a bitter disappointment when the truth in the case shall fairly be known. But to recognize in another the very highest standards of purpose and endeavor of which we have any idea, as purely human standards, is to be instructed and inspired in the direction of those standards; and no disclosure of that person's failure to attain to his own evident standards will lower the ideal which he represents to us in presenting those ideals. As applied to those toward whom we are attracted, a fancy is what we think another to be; an ideal is what we see that another wants to be, and would have us to be. The fancy in such a case is unreal; but the ideal is the realest thing in the world. Where the unreal fancy deceives, the actual ideal inspires. Yet there are those who think that all their fancies are ideals; and who finally cease to aspire toward an ideal, because a fancy has so many times disappointed them.—S. S. Times.

Legend of the Giant's Causeway.

"In the olden time the famous Irish giant, Fin McCoul, had a quarrel with a scotch giant across the water. The Scotchman said he would come over and mop up the floor with Fin if it was not for getting his feet wet. Whereupon Mr. McCoul, like the fine ould Irish gentleman that he was, built this causeway for his Caledonian rival and greeted him with the most tremendous thrashing ever given to man. What was left of the Scot Mr. McCoul generously set up in business in a grocery, and the sea in time washed away Fin's bridge to Scotland."—Chauncey Depew's Lecture.

Wanted: Adjustable Glass Eyes.

One of the most serious defects of the glass eye is its single barrelled expression. To a person of sensitive nature this is an appalling obstacle, and the man who can invent an eye that works on the same plan as a seven shot revolver has millions within his grasp. Just imagine what a revolution such an invention would create. By a simple twitch of the eyelid the proud owner of a revolving eye could turn on any kind of emotion he desired. This invention would make the glass eye a perpetual joy. If the proprietor happened to be at a funeral how easy it would be to cast a gloom over the whole countenance by twitching the lid and letting the eye revolve around to station S. M.—"sadness and melancholy." So on through the whole list of emotions. If it was desired to paralyze a book agent the panorama would move around to the plate with a the "cold, steely glare." This could also be used with good effect at church fairs. So the eye with the "soothing, persuasive expression" would be such a convenience when one came home late from the lodge. And so on. But, alas! the revolving eye has not been invented and the dainty esthete who wishes to throw his soul into his gaze must either carry an assorted collection in his pocket or only let his emotion flow out of one eye.—New York World.

A Frontier Editor's Woes.

We dislike to discuss family matters in our columns, as everybody knows, but the story Jeff. Tarleton is telling around town about our difficulty last Tuesday night is a lie such as nobody but a dirty coyote would be guilty of. We have heard of him and his gassing at Dan McGeehan's saloon. The facts are that we told this red headed slouch to stop keeping company with our daughter. When we returned home last Tuesday night about 11 o'clock we found him just leaving our front porch. There were words, and we admit that we called him a greasy tramp. When he made a pass for us we grabbed him by the whiskers, and when he broke loose we kicked him in the small of the back, and our only regret now is that we did not break his backbone. The lie that he tells is that we drew a gun, which he snatched and then ran us in the house. Nobody saw the fracas and of course he can lie, but Josiah Happgood across the way heard the salute that we gave him as he clawed the gravel down the street. Don't come our way again, Jefferson.—Kickapoo (Dak.) Sentinel.

Rochester, N. Y., March 17, 1887.

From April 1st, 1887, to April 1st, 1888, I offer ($100) one hundred dollars for each and every discovery of a new comet made between the above dates, subject to the following three conditions:

1. It may be discovered either by the naked eye or telescope, but it must be unexpected, except as to the comet of 1815, which is now looked for.

2. (a) The discoverer, if residing in the United States or Canada, must send a prepaid telegram immediately to Dr. Lewis Swift, Director Warner Observatory, Rochester, N. Y., giving the time of discovery, the position and direction of motion with sufficient exactness, if possible, to enable at least one other observer to find it. (b) Discoverers in the other countries must send by immediate mail a full account of the discovery, as above required, to Dr. Lewis Swift, as above.

3. In the United States and Canada this intelligence must not be communicated to any other party or parties, either by letter, telegraph or otherwise until publicly announced through the press by Dr. Swift, which he will do at once on information of the discovery. Great care should be observed regarding this condition, as it is essential to prevent duplication of announcements and for the correct transmission of the discovery, with the name of the discoverer, which will be immediately made by Dr. Swift.

Discoverers living in Continental Europe, will receive their prizes from Warner's Safe Cure Establishment, 10 Schiffeergasse, Frankfurt, a M, Germany; those living in Great Britain, from H. H. Warner & Co's Safe Remedies office, 47 Farringdon St., E. C., London; those in Australasia and Asia, from H. H. Warner & Co's Safe Cure Branch House, 147 Little Lonsdale St. W., Melbourne, Australia; for other parts of the world, prizes will be paid here.

Prizes will be awarded four (4) months after discovery and verification of claim.

Three disinterested scientists will be selected to settle any dispute that may arise regarding comet discoveries.

THE TECHBORNE CASE.

Englishmen will take undoubted interest in anything covering one of the most remarkable cases on record, and the following letter from Sir Roger himself, will throw some light upon his present status. It is dated, 115 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y., Feb'y 22nd, 1887, and reads as follows: Gentlemen—For the last four months I have suffered from rheumatism and every time I sat down and got up, I suffered the most intense agony; in fact, I was not able to move my legs without pain, and when going down stairs, the pain was too dreadful to bear. I was recommended to send for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil and try it. I did so, and to my great surprise and delight, I found it an almost instant cure. I have only used one bottle up to the present, but I can now sit down, get up, and walk about without the slightest pain. Yours truly,

R. E. D. TICHBORNE.

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS WOULD NOT BALANCE THE BENEFIT.

Mr. E. W. Robinson writes from Plattsburg, N. Y.: "I have no objections to your using my name in connection with my case before the public. I have had more ease in breathing, and less pain and lameness about my body than for many years before. Thanks to your treatment, I am able to work the most of the time. To tell the plain truth, it put me in shape I could work. I would not be set back to the time I began your treatment for a thousand dollars. I can walk with more ease, go up and down stairs, get in or out of a wagon in one-third of the time, and double the ease I ever could in many years before, for which I owe you gentlemen, many thanks."

"Compound Oxygen, its Mode of Action and Results," is the title of a brochure of nearly 200 pages freely mailed to any applicant. It makes clear to any one how such statements are justified.

Orders for Compound Oxygen Home Treatment will be filled by H. A. Mathews, 615 Powell Street, San Francisco.

A little burn makes a big smart sometimes. But even a big burn could not make some people smart.

A SUGGESTION TO THE TRAVELING PUBLIC.

Tourists, emigrants and mariners find that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a medicinal safeguard against unhealthful influences, upon which they can implicitly rely, since it prevents the effects of vitiated atmosphere, unaccustomed or unwholesome diet, bad water, or other conditions unfavorable to health. On long voyages, or journeys in latitudes adjacent to the equator, it is especially useful as a preventive of the febrile complaints and disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, which are apt to attack natives of the temperate zone sojourning or traveling in such regions, and it is an excellent protection against the influence of extreme cold, sudden changes of temperature, exposure to damp or extreme fatigue. It not only prevents intermittent and remittent fever, and other diseases of a malarial type, but eradicates them, a fact which has been notorious for years past in North and South America, Mexico, the West Indies, Australia, and other countries.

It sounds a little inconsistent for her to call it a "duck of a bonnet" and yet seem so terribly alarmed over the possibility of its getting wet.

PILES CAN BE CURED.

WESTFIELD, N. Y., May 18, 1885.

For thirty-two years I suffered from piles, both internal and external, with all their attendant agonies, and like many another suffered from hemorrhoids. All those thirty-two years I had to cramp myself to pay doctors and druggists for stuff that was doing me little or no good. Finally I was urged by one who had had the same complaint, but had been cured by BRANDRETH'S PILLS, to try his cure. I did so, and began to improve, and for the past two years I have had no inconvenience from that terrible ailment.

ITS PURPOSE IS SOLELY FOR THE LEGITIMATE HEALING OF DISEASE AND THE RELIEF OF PAIN. IT IS PROMPT IN ACTION.

SEE WHAT ONE WOMAN SAYS OF ITS MERITS.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 5th, 1883. Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham: "As is frequently the case with mothers who have reared large families, I have been a great sufferer for years from complaints incident to married life. I have tried the skill of a number of physicians and the virtue of many medicines without relief, and as an experiment I concluded to try yours. I can assure you that the benefits I have derived from it came not because of any faith I had in it, for I had but slight hope of any permanent good. I am not a seeker after notoriety but I want to tell you that I have been wonderfully benefited by your medicine. I am now using my fourth bottle and it would take but little argument to persuade me that my health is fully restored. I should like to widely circulate the fact of its wonderful curative powers." INVALIDS' HOTEL AND SURGICAL INSTITUTE

No. 663 Main Street, BUFFALO, N. Y.

A FULL STAFF OF EIGHTEEN PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS,

This imposing Establishment was designed and erected to accommodate the large number of invalids who visit Buffalo from every State and Territory, as well as from many foreign lands, that they may avail themselves of the professional services of the Staff of skilled specialists in medicine and surgery that compose the Faculty of this widely-celebrated institution.

A FAIR AND BUSINESS-LIKE OFFER TO INVALIDS.

We earnestly invite you to come, see and examine for yourself, our institutions, appliances, advantages and success in curing chronic diseases. Have a mind of your own. Do not listen to or heed the counsel of skeptical friends or jealous physicians, who know nothing of us, our system of treatment, or means of cure, yet who never lose an opportunity to misrepresent and endeavor to prejudice people against us. We are responsible to you for what we represent, and if you come and visit us, and find that we have misrepresented, in any particular, our institutions, advantages or success, we will promptly refund to you all expenses of your trip. We court honest, sincere investigation, have no secrets, and are only too glad to show all interested and candid people what we are doing for suffering humanity.

NOT ALWAYS NECESSARY TO SEE PATIENTS.

By our original system of diagnosis, we can treat many chronic diseases just as successfully without as with a personal consultation. While we are always glad to see our patients, and become acquainted with them, show them our institutions, and familiarize them with our system of treatment, yet we have not seen one person in five hundred whom we have cured. The perfect accuracy with which scientists are enabled to deduce the most minute particulars in their several departments, appears almost miraculous, if we view it in the light of the early ages. Take, for example, the electro-magnetic telegraph, the greatest invention of the age. Is it not a marvelous degree of accuracy which enables an operator to exactly locate a fracture in a submarine cable nearly three thousand miles long? Our venerable "clerk of the weather" has become so thoroughly familiar with the most wayward moods in nature that he can accurately predict their movements. He can sit in Washington and foretell what the weather will be in Florida or New York as well as if several hundred miles did not intervene between him and the places named. And so in all departments of modern science, what is required is the knowledge of certain signs. From these scientists deduce accurate conclusions regardless of distance. So, also, in medical science, diseases have certain unmistakable signs, or symptoms, and by reason of this fact, we have been enabled to originate and perfect a system of determining, with the greatest accuracy, the nature of chronic diseases, without seeing and personally examining our patients. In recognizing diseases without a personal examination of the patient, we claim to possess no miraculous powers. We obtain our knowledge of the patient's disease by the practical application, to the practice of medicine, of well-established principles of modern science. And it is to the accuracy with which this system has endowed us that we owe our almost world-wide reputation of skillfully treating lingering or chronic affections. This system of practice, and the marvelous success which has been attained thereby, demonstrate the fact that diseases display certain phenomena, which, being subjected to scientific analysis, furnish abundant and unmistakable data, to guide the judgment of the skillful practitioner aright in determining the nature of diseased conditions. The most reliable remedies for treating lingering or chronic diseases, and the greatest skill, are thus placed within the easy reach of every invalid, however distant he or she may reside from the physicians making the treatment of such affections a specialty. Full particulars of our original, scientific system of examining and treating patients at a distance are contained in "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." By R. V. Pierce, M. D. 1000 pages and over 300 colored and other illustrations. Sent, post-paid, for $1.50. Or write and describe your symptoms, inclosing ten cents in stamps, and a complete treatise, on your particular disease, will be sent you, with our terms for treatment and all particulars.

MARVELOUS SUCCESS.

SIGNS OF DISEASE.

COMMON SENSE AS APPLIED TO MEDICINE.

It is a well-known fact, and one that appeals to the judgment of every thinking person, that the physician who devotes his whole time to the study and investigation of a certain class of diseases, must become better qualified to treat such diseases than he who attempts to treat every ill to which flesh is heir, without giving special attention to any class of diseases. Men, in all ages of the world, who have become famous, have devoted their lives to some special branch of science, art, or literature.

By thorough organization, and subdividing the practice of medicine and surgery in this institution, every invalid is treated by a specialist—one who devotes his undivided attention to the particular class of diseases to which the case belongs. The advantage of this arrangement must be obvious. Medical science offers a vast field for investigation, and no physician can, within the brief limits of a life-time, achieve the highest degree of success in the treatment of every malady incident to humanity.

OUR FIELD OF SUCCESS.

NASAL, THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES. The treatment of Diseases of the Air Passages and Lungs, such as Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption, both through correspondence and at our institutions, constitutes an important specialty.

We publish three separate books on Nasal, Throat and Lung Diseases, which give much valuable information, viz: (1) A Treatise on Consumption, Laryngitis and Bronchitis; price, post-paid, ten cents. (2) A Treatise on Asthma, or Phthisic, giving new and successful treatment; price, post-paid, ten cents. (3) A Treatise on Chronic Nasal Catarrh; price, post-paid, two cents.

DISEASES OF DIGESTION. Dyspepsia, "Liver Complaint," Obstinate Constipation, Chronic Diarrhea, Tape-worms, and kindred affections are among those chronic diseases in the successful treatment of which our specialists have attained great success. Many of the diseases affecting the liver and other organs contributing in their functions to the process of digestion, are very obscure, and are not infrequently mistaken by both laymen and physicians for other maladies, and treatment is employed directed to the removal of a disease which does not exist. Our Complete Treatise on Diseases of the Digestive Organs will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

KIDNEY DISEASES. BRIGHT'S DISEASE, DIABETES, and kindred maladies, have been very largely treated, and cures effected in thousands of cases which had been pronounced beyond hope. These diseases are readily diagnosticated, or determined, by chemical analysis of the urine, without a personal examination of patients, who can, therefore, generally be successfully treated at their homes. The study and practice of chemical analysis and microscopical examination of the urine in our consideration of cases, with reference to correct diagnosis, in which our institution long ago became famous, has naturally led to a very extensive practice in diseases of the urinary organs. Probably no other institution in the world has been so largely patronized by sufferers from this class of maladies as the old and world-famed World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel. Our specialists have acquired, through a vast and varied experience, great expertness in determining the exact nature of each case, and, hence, have been successful in nicely adapting their remedies for the cure of each individual case.

CAUTION. These delicate diseases should be carefully treated by a specialist thoroughly familiar with them, and who is competent to ascertain the exact condition and stage of advancement which the disease has made (which can only be ascertained by a careful and microscopical examination of the urine), for medicines which are curative in one stage or condition are known to do positive injury in others. We have never, therefore, attempted to put up anything for general sale through druggists, recommending to cure these diseases, although possessing very superior remedies, knowing full well from an extensive experience that the only safe and successful course is to carefully determine the disease and its progress in each case by a chemical and microscopical examination of the urine, and then adapt our medicines to the exact stage of the disease and condition of our patient.

WONDERFUL SUCCESS. To this wise course of action we attribute the marvelous success attained by our specialists in that important and extensive Department of our institutions devoted exclusively to the treatment of diseases of the kidneys and bladder. The treatment of diseases of the urinary organs having constituted a leading branch of our practice at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, and, being in constant receipt of numerous inquiries for a complete work on the nature and curability of these maladies, written in a style to be easily understood, we have published a large illustrated Treatise on these diseases, which will be sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in postage stamps.

BLADDER DISEASES. INFLAMMATION OF THE BLADDER, STONE IN THE BLADDER, Gravel, Enlarged Prostate Gland, Retention of Urine, and kindred affections, may be included among those in the cure of which our specialists have achieved extraordinary success. These are fully treated of in our illustrated pamphlet on Urinary Diseases. Sent by mail for ten cents in stamps.

STRICTURE. STRICTURES AND URINARY FISTULÆ.—Hundreds of cases of the worst form of strictures, many of them greatly aggravated by the careless use of instruments in the hands of inexperienced physicians and surgeons, causing false passages, urinary fistulæ, and other complications, annually consult us for relief and cure. That no case of this class is too difficult for the skill of our specialists is proved by cures reported in our illustrated treaties on these maladies, to which we refer with pride. To intrust this class of cases to physicians of small experience is a dangerous proceeding. Many a man has been ruined for life by so doing, while thousands annually lose their lives through unskillful treatment. Send particulars of your case and ten cents in stamps for a large, illustrated treatise containing many testimonials.

NERVOUS DISEASES. Epileptic Convulsions, or Fits, Paralysis, or Palsy, Locomotor Ataxia, St. Vitus's Dance, Insomnia, or inability to sleep, and threatened insanity, Nervous Debility, arising from overstudy, excesses, and other causes, and every variety of nervous affection, are treated by our specialists for these diseases with unusual success. See numerous cases reported in our different illustrated pamphlets on nervous diseases, any one of which will be sent for ten cents in postage stamps, when request for them is accompanied with a statement of a case for consultation, so that we may know which one of our Treatises to send.

DISEASES OF WOMEN. We have a special Department, thoroughly organized, and devoted exclusively to the treatment of Diseases of Women. Every case consulting our specialists, whether by letter or in person, is given the most careful and considerate attention. Important cases (and we get few which have not already baffled the skill of all the home physicians) has the benefit of a full Council, of skilled specialists. Rooms for ladies in the Invalids' Hotel are very private. Send ten cents in stamps for our large Complete Treatise on Diseases of Women, illustrated with numerous wood-cuts and colored plates (160 pages).

RADICAL CURE OF RUPTURE. HERNIA (Breach), or RUPTURE, no matter of how long standing, or of what size, is promptly and permanently cured by our specialists, without the knife and without dependence upon trusses. Abundant references. Send ten cents for illustrated Treatise.

PILES, FISTULÆ, and other diseases affecting the lower bowels, are treated with wonderful success. The worst cases of pile tumors are permanently cured in fifteen to twenty days. Send ten cents for Illustrated Treatise.

DELICATE DISEASES. Organic weakness, nervous debility, premature decline of the manly powers, involuntary vital losses, impaired memory, mental anxiety, absence of will-power, melancholy, weak back, and kindred affections, are speedily, thoroughly and permanently cured.

To those acquainted with our institutions, it is hardly necessary to say that the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, with the branch establishment located at No. 3 New Oxford Street, London, England, have, for many years, enjoyed the distinction of being the most largely patronized and widely celebrated institutions in the world for the treatment and cure of those affections which arise from youthful indiscretions and pernicious, solitary practices.

We, many years ago, established a special Department for the treatment of these diseases, under the management of some of the most skillful physicians and surgeons on our Staff, in order that all who apply to us might receive all the advantages of a full Council of the most experienced specialists.

WE OFFER NO APOLOGY. We offer no apology for devoting so much attention to this neglected class of diseases, believing no condition of humanity is too wretched to merit the sympathy and best services of the noble profession to which we belong. Many who suffer from these terrible diseases contract them innocently. Why any medical man, intent on doing good and alleviating suffering, should shun such cases, we cannot imagine. Why any one should consider it otherwise than most honorable to cure the worst cases of these diseases, we cannot understand; and yet of all the other maladies which afflict mankind there is probably none about which physicians in general practice know so little.

We shall, therefore, continue, as heretofore, to treat with our best consideration, sympathy, and skill, all applicants who are suffering from any of these delicate diseases.

CURED AT HOME. Most of these cases can be treated by us when at a distance just as well as if they were here in person.

Our Complete and Illustrated Treatise (168 pages) on these subjects is sent to any address on receipt of ten cents in stamps.

SURGICAL PRACTICE. Hundreds of the most difficult operations known to modern surgery are annually performed in the most skillful manner, by our Surgeon-specialists. Large Stones are safely removed from the Bladder, by crushing, washing and pumping them out, thus avoiding the great danger of cutting. Our specialists, remove cataract from the eye, thereby curing blindness. They also straighten cross-eyes and insert artificial ones when needed. Many Ovarian and also Fibroid Tumors of the Uterus are arrested in growth and cured by electrolysis, coupled with other means of our invention, whereby the great danger of cutting operations in these cases is avoided.

Especially has the success of our improved operations for Varicocele, Hydrocele, Fistula, Ruptured Cervix Uteri, and for Ruptured Perineum, been alike gratifying both to ourselves and our patients. Not less so have been the results of numerous operations for Stricture of the Cervical Canal, a condition in the female generally resulting in Barrenness, or Sterility, and the cure of which, by a safe and painless operation, removes this comb.onest of impediments to the bearing of offspring.

A Complete Treatise on any one of the above maladies will be sent on receipt of ten cents in stamps.

ALL CHRONIC DISEASES A SPECIALTY. Although we have in the preceding paragraphs, made mention of some of the special ailments to which particular attention is given by the specialists at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, yet the institution abounds in skill, facilities, and apparatus for the successful treatment of every form of chronic ailment, whether requiring for its cure medical or surgical means.

All letters of inquiry, or of consultation, should be addressed to

Previous to the opening of the meeting Brother Gardner, Sir Isaac Walpole and Waydown Bebee were seen in earnest conversation around the president's desk, and when the triangle sounded it was pretty well understood throughout the room that some matter of gravest importance was on the tapis. One individual seemed to feel even more than a lively curiosity. This was Brother Process Davis, a member of about six months' standing. He jammed himself into a corner and tried to appear as small as possible, and when inquiries were made about his sore heel he let on that he had an awful toothache and didn't want to talk. Scarcely had the meeting opened when he was called to appear at the president's desk. The look of terror which came to his face as he rose up proved that he regarded the matter in a very serious light, and he shuffled up the long aisle like one going to an execution.

"Brudder Process Davis," said the president in very solemn tones, "at one of our weekly meetin's last fall, an' as we war' about to disperse to our homes, Sir Isaac Walpole diskibered dat his umbreller was missin'. It was an umbreller wid a white bone handle, an' it was an heirloom in his fam'ly. His gran'fadder had walked under dat umbreller, an' it had kept de rain off his fadder, an' he himself had owned it fur nigh upon thirty y'ars. It had been left in kyars an' on steamboats an' on de front doah steps, an' nobody had took it. He had brung it down heah two hundred times, an' it war' allus waitin' fur him when he got ready to go home. At las' some one stole it—some human hyena laid his desecrated paws on dat sacred relick an' bore it off. We made ebery effort to find it, but de hunt was in vain. Den we settled down to wait for Justice. She nebber sleeps. She sometimes does a good deal of foolin' around, an' dar am sometimes a mighty long wait between de ackts, but she nebber sleeps. She didn't go to sleep dis time. She war' lookin' fur you, an' yesterday she oberhauled you. You had Sir Isaac's umbreller under yer arm. Heah am de libin' proof to convict you! You are de hyena who stole it, an' you are now befo' de bar of Justice! Prisoner, how do you plead?"

Process stood there with his mouth open and could not reply. The sudden shock seemed to have paralyzed him. His guilt was as plain as the hind buttons on a coat.

"De pusson who will steal an umbreller under any circumstances," continued the president, "desarves condine punishment. In dis case you stole it from a fellow-member of a society, an' you added de sin of lyin' to your crime. Your name will be crossed off our books, an' you will enter dis hall no mo' forever. De carryin' out of de rest of de sentence am left to Giveadam Jones an' Hercules Johnson."

The prisoner was removed to the ante-room, and about a minute later Paradise Hall was shaken from roof to cellar. This was followed by a bumping sound on the stairs leading to the alley, and this again by the sound of feet making a rush for life. Brother Process Davis will doubtless remain in Canada during the rest of his life.—Detroit Free Press.

HIGH-LIFE NUPTIALS.

A Pretty Editorial Send-Off Condensed from the Muddy Forks Bugle.

Bill Shanks and Lib Ripper waltzed into the office of our genial justice of the peace yesterday, and were made one man in about three shakes of a dead sheep's tail. Lib and Bill are leading society people here, and they have scads of friends who join us in wishing that their married life may be all love and molasses. Bill is a royal good boy, and them that knows Lib knows that they ain't no discount on her. She is the most accomplished young lady in Muddy Forks, and one that any man could be proud of. She killed two bears with a club, one day last spring, and can slap over three acres of prairie-sod with a yoke of oxen any day. She can split more rails in a day than any other young lady in these parts, and there ain't many men that beat her on cord-wood. Lib is a dandy when it comes to fancy work of this kind.

BIRDS AND SNAKES.

Two Stories Told of Them by a Blackfoot Indian Who Studied Nature.

The Indians of course are close students of nature. In their own way they can tell why and how the mountains and prairies, lakes and forests were formed, and it is most interesting to listen to their accounts of the cosmogony. Many and strange are their stories of animal life. I heard yesterday, says J. W. Schultz, of Piegan, M. T., two stories which may interest some of your readers. They were told me by a very old man who is blind and feeble, but whose memory seems to be as active as ever. I give you the stories in his words as nearly as I can translate them:

"I was a young man, and I sat beneath the trees making arrows. I heard above a redhead (red-headed woodpecker) much crying. 'Why cry much?' I thought, and looking much I saw. I found why cried that little bird. Now, a great branch had split, and the end on the ground lay. Near where the split was hole. H'ya! there redhead's home. There her children. H'ya! much to be feared was he who was crawling there, to steal and eat her children. That why redhead much cry. Then fly away redhead and tell husband come quick. Then both come back, and flying much try to hit snake. Soon husband strike snake through head and bill stick in wood. Make wings move to stay there all time bill, so bill not come out. Snake make his body go one way, another way. Can't move his head. Soon bird pull out bill, snake to ground fall, soon die. I pick him up, hole through head. H'ya! very strong redhead. I make arrows under trees, all this I saw and I know this how strong is redhead.

"Now, I hunted in the mountains, and on a cliff I saw many swallow nests and many swallows flying about crying. I thought, because afraid of me cry those little birds. No! Close by on a shelf, a big rattlesnake crawling to steal those swallow children. Then fly away all swallows, go tell black-greasy-wings (hawks) about snake. Come back quick and bring black-greasy-wings. He see snake and fly very high, then fly falling down (swooping down), catch snake. H'ya! Very smart black-greasy-wings. One claw stick in top of head, one claw under. Not open mouth snake, can't bite. No die black-greasy-wings. Fly very, very high, then let snake go. Fall on rocks snake, and mashed and dead. Then black-greasy-wings take snake to feed his children.—Forest and Stream.

GOOD DISINFECTANTS.

How Many Live-Stock Diseases and Ailments May Be Prevented.

Cheaper than cure, especially with live-stock, is prevention. While with many contagious diseases, it is, of course, often impossible to keep animals from being attacked, yet by using good care valuable aid may be given in keeping the stock intact. If kept in a good, thrifty condition, and with reference to good health, there is very much less danger of animals being attacked, and if attacked, they are in a much better condition to withstand the inroads of disease.

Filth breeds disease, and is indirectly the principal cause of the larger proportion of diseases in our live-stock. And when stock are kept reasonably clean, and are provided with warm, clean, dry quarters, and are fed upon clean food, ordinarily such stock will be healthy. In order to do this to the best advantage, it will be necessary to thoroughly disinfect the poultry house, pig pens, cow and horse stables, and the sheep sheds. All need thorough cleaning, and when difficulty arises, disinfection. Especially should thorough work in this direction be given in the spring. In a great majority of instances the stock have been more or less confined, and as a natural consequence these places have become more or less foul, and in such a case it will almost certainly cause disease or breed parasites, in some respects fully as bad as disease. Where the pens are close enough to admit of thorough work, burning roll sulphur is a good disinfectant; add a little old grease, so that it will burn well. Crude carbolic acid is another good, cheap material that can be used to good advantage. As it is a poison if taken internally, some care must be taken in using. The places should be thoroughly cleaned out and then the carbolic acid, diluted with water, be applied freely. A good brush will, for most purposes, be the best, as it will reach the cracks to the best advantage. Lime applied as a whitewash is very valuable to purify, and also to destroy germs and parasites. Carbolic acid can be added to the lime whitewash after it is made, and it will be all the more valuable. Any of these are cheap, and should be used liberally in the spring, after cleaning up. The work should be done reasonably early, before the warm days come on, and other farm work becomes too pressing.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

—In blissful ignorance that the peacock was esteemed a famous dinner dainty by epicures before Paris itself was famous, a correspondent in Paris writes thus: "The most novel feature of the entertainment was the appearance of a roasted peacock, decked in all its feathers, a beautiful and decorative object to look at as well as a very delicious bird to eat. The introduction of the peacock as the course of game at grand dinner parties is the newest feature of the season, and one can only wonder why a fowl of such delicate flesh, as well as of such superb plumage, should have been so long neglected by gourmands."—*N. BILL NYE.

He Makes Trial of His Hand as a Localizer.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.

The following constitutes the items of great interest occurring on the east side among the colored people of Blue Ruin:

Plum Beasley's house caught on fire last Tuesday night. He reckons it was caused by a defective flue, for the fire caught in the north wing. This is one of Plum's bon mots, however. He tries to make light of it, but the wood he has been using all winter was white birch, and when he got a big dose of hickory at the same place last week it was so dark that he didn't notice the difference and before he knew it he had a bigger fire than he had allowed. In the midst of a pleasant flow of conversation gas collected in the wood and caused an explosion, which threw a passel of live coals on the bed. The house was soon a solid mass of flame. Mr. Beasley is still short two children.

Mr. Granulation Hicks, of Boston, Mass., who has won deserved distinction in advancing the interests of Sir George Pullman, of Chicago, is here visiting his parents, who reside on Upper Hominy. We are glad to see Mr. Hicks, and hope he may live long to visit Blue Ruin and propitiate up and down our streets.

Miss Roseola Cardiman has just been the recipient of a beautiful pair of chaste earbobs from her brother, who is a night watchman in a jewelry store run by a man named Tiffany in New York. Roseola claims that Tiffany makes a right smart of her brother, and sets a heap by him.

We are pained to learn that the free reading room, established over Amalgamation Brown's store, has been closed up by the police. Blue Ruin has clamored for a free temperance reading room and brain retort for ten years, and now a ruction between two of our best known citizens, over the relative merits of a natural pair and a doctored flush, has called down the vengeance of the authorities and shut up what was a credit to the place and a quiet resort, where young men could come night after night and kind of complicate themselves at. There are two or three men in this place that will bully or bust everything they can get into, and they have perforated more outrages on Blue Ruin than we are entitled to put up with.

There was a successful doings at the creek last Sabbath, during which baptism was administered to four grown people and a dude from Sandy Mush. The pastor thinks it will take first rate, though it is still too soon to tell.

Surrender Adams got a letter last Friday from his son Gladstone, who filed on a homestead near Porcupine, D. T., two years ago. He says they have had another of those unprecedented winters there for which Dakota is so justly celebrated. He thinks this one has been even more so than any of the others. He wishes he was back here at Blue Ruin, where a man can go out doors for half an hour without getting ostracised by the elements. He says they brag a good deal on their ozone there, but he allows that it can be overdone. He states that when the ozone in Dakota is feeling pretty well and humping itself and curling up sheet iron roofs and blowing trains off the track, a man has to tie a clothesline to himself, with the outer end fastened to the door knob, before it is safe to visit his own hen house. He says that his nearest neighbor is seventeen miles away, and a man might as well buy his own chickens as to feed his money away on seventeen miles of clothesline.

It is a first rate letter, and the old man wonders who Gladstone got to write it for him.

The valuable ecru dog of our distinguished townsman, Mr. Piedmont Babbitt, was seriously impaired last Saturday morning by an east bound freight.

He will not wrinkle up his nose at another freight train.

George Wellington, of Hickory, was in town the front end of the week. He has accepted a position in the livery, feed and sale stable at Sandy Mush. Call again, George.

Gabriel Brant met with a sad mishap a few days since while crossing the French Broad river, by which he lost his leg.

Any one who may find an extra leg below where the accident occurred will confer a favor on Mr. Brant by returning same to No. 66½ Pneumonia street. It may be readily identified by any one, as it is made of an old pickhandle and weighs four pounds.

J. Quincy Burns has written a war article for The Century Magazine, regarding a battle where he was at. In this article he aims to describe the sensations of a man who is ignorant of physical fear and yet yearns to have the matter submitted to arbitration. He gives a thorough expose of his efforts in trying to find a suitable board of arbitration as soon as he saw that the enemy felt hostile and eager for the fray.

The forthcoming number of The Century will be eagerly snapped up by Mr. Burns' friends who are familiar with his pleasing and graphic style of writing. He describes with wonderful power the sense of utter exhaustion which came over him and the feeling of bitter disappointment when he realized that he was too far away to participate in the battle and too fatigued to make a further search for suitable arbitrators.—Bill Nye in Boston Globe.

Too Much Lamb.

There is a marble lamb on the tombstone of an old Galvestonian, and when an old friend saw it for the first time, he exclaimed:

"How appropriate! Was he of a gentle disposition?"

"Whew! I guess not. He would shoot in a minute, but he always overfed himself on spring lamb and green peas. That's what killed him, I reckon. Too much spring lamb and mint julep will get away with the best of us.—Texas Siftings.

Preparing for the Worst.

Gentleman—You have a nice store here.

Milliner—Yes; it's very nice since we got it all fixed up for our Easter opening.

Gentleman—I would like to purchase a business of this kind if I could obtain it on reasonable terms.

Milliner—For yourself or a friend?

Gentleman—Well, you see I have a wife and six daughters, and it's almost Easter.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Anticipation.

Waile the sap is slightly starting,
And the Lenten times departing,
While just the slightest verdure is preparing to emerge,
The musings of the maiden
Are with summer pleasures laden,
With the swinging of the hammock and the sounding of the surge.

She judges twilight flirting
An amusement most diverting,
With its foolish conversation so incessantly renewed;
With the evening sun descending,
She delights to watch the blending
Of the verdure of the landscape with the verdure of the dude.

Her fancy dwells with flowers
In the shade of pleasant bowers,
Where the fairy footed summer winds most opportunely steal;
When the verdonks and brambles
Shall suggest romantic rambles
Through the old Druidic woodland or the pages of Lucille. —New York World.

THE LIME KILN CLUB.

A Witch Craft Case "Tooken Up" and Disposed of.

"De case of Brudder James Warren, of Miner Hill, Tenn., will be fust tooken up," said Brother Gardner as he opened the meeting and winked to Elder Toots to push another empty herring box into the stove. "Brudder Warren claims dat he am bewitched, an' he has written to dis club to ask it to do sunthin' to drive de evil specrits away. It has got to sich a pass dat de witches take his ole mule outer de ba'n at night an' ride him all ober de kentry, an' Brudder Warren feels specrit hands passin' ober his face an' pullin his h'ar o' nights. Dis club will do sunthin' for him. If he war a local member we'd cure him in about ten minits. As he am an honorary, an' fur away, we shall cross his name off de books an' send him offishul notis dat he am a bounced man."

"I hev repeatedly referred to dis matter of superstishun, an' if members can't be enlightened dey kin be fired out. De day of ghosts, hobgoblins an' witches has passed away, an' de cull'd man who can't believe it has no bizness in dis club. Mebbe dar' was a time when witches went chasin' 'round de kentry on an old raw boned mule, scarin' people half to death an' leavin' a trail of fiah an' smoke, but things hev changed. De wedder hain't right fur 'em now, an' de purleece give 'em de collar an' send 'em to de workhouse."

"Mebbe specrit hands hev bin laid on Brudder Warren, but I doubt it. I guess Tennessee whisky had a good deal to do wid it. All o' you just listen to me when I say dat de fust complaint of specrit hands in Detroit will be follered by a scene to make somebody's heart ache! Be keerful how unknown hands pull yer ha'r. De member of dis club who sees a witch had better keep powerful quiet about it or he'll be turned ober to de kickin' committee to be dealt wid. De seckretary will write to Brudder Warren dat we hev dun sunthin' fur him, an' notify our branches at Chattanooga an' Knoxville dat he has bin fired."—Detroit Free Press.

A Scriptural Problem.

Uncle Arthur had been giving his little niece a few lessons from the Old Testament, and he had dwelt for some time upon the story of Cain and Abel.

"Uncle," said the little kitten, thoughtfully, "ain't you very sorry for poor old Cain?"

"Why, no, my child; why should I be sorry?"

"Well, he was the first one that went in the bad place, wasn't he?"

"Yes, he was the first past the post for Hades."

"Well, just think how lonely he must have been with nobody but the devil to keep him company?"—New York Mercury.

Taking Advantage of Circumstances.

"Begorra! there's that sardine what asked me to foight last noight over at Tim's, whin he knew I had a previous engagement. Dommed if I don't thry him now!"

"Yez wanted to foight wid me, did yez? Well, Oim riddy now. Put up yer fists. Take that—an' that!"—Judge.

An Aspersion.

John came down rather late looking like the last rose of summer before last.

"I don't want any breakfast this morning, Mary," he said, starting for the door.

"You might just as well stay home," she replied. "The saloons are all closed to-day."

"So?" exclaimed John, disappointedly, and then appearing to brighten up. "Did you try the back doors?"

But she only cast a glance of withering contempt at him, and he passed out.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Bet Easily Won.

Robinson—Did you ever notice, Brown, the habit Dumley has of saying "What's that?" to every remark made to him?

Brown—No; I think you're mistaken, Robinson.

Robinson—I'll bet you $5 that you can't make a remark to him that he won't say "What's that?"

Brown (puts up the money and accosts Dumley)—Will you have something to drink, Dumley?

Dumley—Dontcarefido.—New York Sun.

No Tick There.

Young Man (to fellow passenger)—You appear anxious, sir.

Fellow Passenger—Yes, I want to know the time o' day very much; but I see you wear two watch chains, and I don't suppose you—

Young Man (buttoning his coat)—No; I foolishly allowed both of my watches to run down last night, but I think it must be in the neighborhood of 9 or 10 o'clock, or thereabouts.—New York Sun.

Some Relative, Anyhow.

President of Young Ladies' Seminary—But, Aurelia, the gentleman that has just visited you was certainly not your brother? There wasn't the slightest family resemblance.

Aurelia (piqued)—I can't help it if you don't want to believe it—he was at least a cousin, that you may rely upon.—Fliegende Blatter.

No Wonder.

"You say the murdered man was leaning against the fence when the prisoner hacked him to pieces," cross examined the lawyer. "Now, while this was taking place how did you stand?"

"I—I stood aghast," was the trembling reply.—Judge.

HINTS ON COURTING.

Some Things a Lover Should, and Others He Should Not, Do or Say.

Select the girl. Agree with the girl's father in politics and the mother in religion. If you have a rival keep an eye on him. Don't swear to the girl that you never heard yourself snore in your sleep. Don't put too much sweet stuff on paper. If you do you will hear it read in after years, when your wife has some especial purpose in inflicting upon you the severest punishment known to a married man. Go home at a reasonable hour in the evening. Don't wait until the girl has to throw her whole soul into a yawn that she can't cover with both hands. A little thing like that may cause a coolness at the very beginning of the game. In cold weather finish saying good night in the house. Don't stretch it all the way to the front gate and thus lay the foundation for future asthma, bronchitis, neuralgia and chronic catarrh to help you worry the girl to death after she has married you. Don't lie about your financial condition. It is very annoying for a bride who has pictured for herself a life of luxury in your ancestral halls to learn too late that you expect her to ask a bald-headed parent to take you in out of the cold. Don't be too soft. "These little hands shall never do a stroke of work when they are mine, and you shall have nothing to do in our home but to sit all day long and chirp to the canaries," as if any sensible woman could be happy fooling away time in that sort of style, and a girl has a fine retentive memory for soft things and silly promises of courtship. Occasionally, in after years, when she is washing the dinner dishes or patching the west end of your trousers, she will remind you of them in a cold, sarcastic tone. Don't be a chump.—Iowa Messenger.

An Arkansas Dig at Kansas.

A traveler in Kansas, while crossing a prairie, came upon a party of friends who seemed to be preparing the land for agricultural purposes.

"My friend," said the traveler, addressing one of the men, "you are laying off your corn rows quite a distance apart."

"Corn rows?" the man gasped.

"Yes, those rows over there."

"My stars, stranger!" exclaimed the Kansas man, "is it possible you ain't hearn of it?"

"Heard of what?"

"Of the boom. Man alive, them ain't corn rows over thar; they air streets, an' this here is a city. You air now on the corner of Commercial and Emporium streets, an' not in the check of a corn row, as you mout suppose."—Arkansas Traveler.

SPRING MANURING.

The Best Way of Applying Reliable Commercial Fertilizers.

We usually expect to do very little manuring in the spring. There is generally too much else to do. Whenever the weather will admit the oats must be sowed, then the flax, then the corn crop planted, and along with these the garden and truck patch must not be neglected. This on the ordinary farm gives us all that we want to do. If the soil is not made rich enough during the winter by hauling out and scattering what manure we can procure during the winter, we must, to a large extent, depend upon something else if we expect to fertilize so as to derive any considerable amount of benefit.

The last two years I have been trying commercial manures. Part was applied in the hill when the seed was planted and part after the seed had germinated and made a start to grow. When applied in this way the soil was well stirred around the roots and the prepared fertilizer applied, working as carefully as possible around the roots. The last year I was satisfied to a considerable extent that the best results were secured by applying the fertilizers in the drills before sowing the seed, making the soil fine in the furrows or drills and then applying the fertilizer and working well into the soil. If the ground has been properly fined this can be done very rapidly. When the supply of manure is not sufficient to fertilize as thoroughly as should be done, I should certainly advise using a good commercial fertilizer applied in the hill either for corn, cane or potatoes.

You can purchase special manures containing plant food designed to furnish the kind of plant food specially needed by that variety of plant in order to make the best growth. But for ordinary use I would advise using what is generally termed "complete fertilizers" as best adapted to general use on the farm. Good barn-yard manure, if well rotted, can be applied after the crops are planted if it can be secured, and be made of considerable benefit to the growing crops. It is necessary, of course, that it should be made reasonably fine and be spread as evenly as possible over the surface. Cultivating or working with the soil sufficient to keep mellow and destroy the weeds will work the manure into the soil and place it where the feeding roots of the plants can reach it.

This is not the best plan of manuring. When it can be done better results can be secured by hauling it out and applying before the crop is planted, harrowing or cultivating so that it will be worked well into the soil. This is the most profitable way of manuring, when it can be done. Yet, when you are not able to follow this plan, rather than fail to apply the manure when you have a supply, I should certainly advise applying after planting rather than let the manure lie and the crop be raised without it. Apply manure whenever you have it to apply and can find time to do the work. It very rarely happens but that some portion of the farm is in a condition to be benefitted by an application.

It pays to make sure and apply all the manure possible. Every thing that can be gathered up and worked into manure should be saved. There is hardly a possible danger of applying too much. The worst difficulty on our Western farms is securing a sufficient quantity.—N. J. Shepherd, in Western Plowman.

BUREAU OF MENDING.

What a New Yorker Has Done Toward Lessening the Woes of Bachelors.

"Bureau of mending" is the sign on the door of a big rear-room in one of the business blocks in Fourteenth street, near Fifth avenue. A reporter found inside the room several women running sewing-machines and others stitching with all their might at articles of clothing that lay in their laps. Bundles wrapped in newspapers with orders pinned to them were piled on a long table.

"We think we are filling a long-felt want," said the manager, a busy-appearing man. "Persons living in boarding-houses and hotels have long experienced the inconvenience of either having to do their own mending, for which they have neither facilities nor the necessary practical knowledge, or to be obliged to throw away articles of clothing before they are really worn out. The Bureau of Mending has been organized to do the mending of such persons at prices reasonable enough to make it worth their while to have it done.

"By the employment of a large corps of skilled operators we are prepared to do all kinds of repairs expeditiously and thoroughly. Our messengers will be sent for articles to be repaired anywhere within the city limits on notification by postal card.

"Socks darned for 5 cents per pair," said the manager, taking up his price list: "shirts rebosomed for 35 cents apiece; new collar bands, 10 cents apiece; new wristbands, 5 cents each; gloves mended at 5 cents per pair; napkins, 5 cents each; sheets or pillow cases hemmed, 10 cents each. All kinds of repairs done for ladies at exceptionally low prices."

"I believe," said the manager, "that this business is original with me. I have letters from bachelors calling me their benefacter."—N. Y. Sun.

MODERN DRESSMAKING.

The Art of Adapting the Prevailing Modes to Individual Requirements.

The dressmaking of to-day is very different from that of a few years ago. It is now the work of an artist. Every seam, every curve and line must be perfect in its form, and be on the latest approved mode as to shape and garniture, but the individual figure must be studied as a whole, each point separately, and the chosen style adapted to the form. Neither can the same style of drapery be adopted by all persons and equally becoming results expected. It is the successful adaption of prevailing modes to individual requirements that entitles modern dressmaking to be classed among the fine arts. The newest modes allow no darts to appear on the outside; they are made in the lining, however, in the usual way, and the pliable outer material is stretched and molded to the figure over the fitted lining, which gives a bias effect to the lower parts of the fronts that is strikingly noticeable when the goods is striped or plaided. Waists are made as long as the figure will permit and are thoroughly boned, so that even a suggestion of a wrinkle is avoided. In addition to the usual complement of whalebones many dressmakers add short ones over the hips; one placed diagonally from the front seam of the side gore commencing about three inches above the waist line and reaching to the bottom of the basque at the back seam of the side gore, and another one placed over this so as to form an X. This keeps the basque smooth over the hips, and sometimes a second X is made on the side form. The basque, with a long-pointed front and well bound over the hips, will give a long-waisted effect to the figure, so this must be considered in reference to its becomingness. Shoulder seams are placed on the top and extended only to the point of the shoulder, and the arm-holes are shaped and the sleeves fitted with the greatest nicety. Necks are still worn very high and collars are broad and fit closely. When the vest or plastron is made on the basque the collar fastens on the side. Moliere effects are shown on both vests and plastrons, and they are often made of an entirely different material and color from the rest of the dress. A vest of pink crape is set on a costume of heliotrope taille, and a pale blue moliere is effective in a dress of dark blue. Two shades of green may be combined, and cream can be used with any color. The majority of dresses have a close sleeve with a simple trimming at the wrist. Ribbons are used in profusion for ornamenting dresses, and promise to be still more extensively employed as thinner materials are assumed.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Concerning Drilled Wells.

A drilled well should be made deep, that it may hold considerable water. If not, it may too easily be pumped dry. Moreover, the fine sand, generally present, works its way, not only filling up the lower end of the casing, but when the pump pipe is set low, and is pumping fast, some of the fine sand will be pumped up, and lodge in the valve, soon causing the valve to stay partly open, so that the pump will not hold water, but must be primed for a new start. If the well be drilled deep after water is first reached, a space can be allowed for filling up, and the pump pipe need not be placed so near the bottom. But there is less danger of filling up if the well be thoroughly cleansed or pumped out after being sunk to the proper depth. This work properly belongs to the men who drill the well, and should never be omitted. A great deal of the floating sediment, if not removed then and there, will be a source of trouble ever afterward.—Cincinnati Times.

When the Cuckoo Cries.

In Northumberland one is told if you are walking on a hard road when the cuckoo first calls, that the ensuing season will be full of calamity; to be on soft ground is a lucky omen. In the Maritime highlands and Hebrides, if the cuckoo is first heard by one who has not broken his fast, some misfortune is expected. Indeed, besides the danger, it is considered a reproach to one to have heard the cuckoo while hungry. In France to hear the cuckoo for the first time fasting is to make the hearer an idle do nothing for the rest of the year or to numb his limbs for the same period. There is a similar belief in Somersetshire. In Westphalia the peasants, on hearing the cuckoo for the first time, roll over and over on the grass in order to insure themselves against lumbago for the rest of the year. This is considered all the more likely to happen if the bird repeats his cry while they are on the ground.—Chicago News.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

County Official Paper.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

SATURDAY, JUNE 4.....1887.

There is not a man in Inyo county but who would be heartily glad to see the railroad extended to Los Angeles. Now let everybody stick a pin right here: No irrigation district no railroad.

If the proposed irrigation district shall be established a large sum of money will be brought into the valley and spent here. Every merchant, every farmer, every man who wants work for himself or for teams will get a part of the money.

No tax for interest on bonds can be levied upon property outside the limits of the irrigation district. The metes and bounds of the proposed district are accurately laid down in the proclamation ordering a general election, now published each week in the INYO INDEPENDENT. Property not included in those metes and bound cannot be taxed for the benefit of the district.

No change has been made in the location of the proposed canal since the Supervisors ordered an election on the organization of an irrigation district. No such change can be made without a new petition, a new survey, and the making and publishing of a new proclamation for an election by the Board of Supervisors. It would prevent a good deal of mental disquiet to honest people if the pestiferous idiot who makes all these explanations necessary were tied in a sack and buried in the alkaline sands of Owens Lake a cable's lengh from the shore, where the tide never ebbs and flows. Such an immersion might make the bones of the creature fit for heaven; it would "wash them whiter than snow;" he hasn't soul enough worth bothering about.

THE WAY TO KILL BEAR.

In the Chaparral of Eel River, California—Results Not Satisfactory.

Early in the morning we were slipping along through the chaparral. The major said that was the way to kill bear—slip along through the chaparral. The slipping along involved a great many scratches and slaps in the face from branches, but we all knew it was the correct thing and didn't mind. Presently the major, who was in advance, halted. We halted. The major put his hand behind him and enjoined silence. We didn't breathe. Then he turned toward us a face blazing with excitement and beckoned. We stole up without a sound. We were on the edge of a little open—perhaps forty yards across. Opposite, through a cleft in the bushes, shone about a square foot of reddish hide, and beyond we saw the tip of an ear of the bear to which it belonged. He was evidently asleep.

We leveled our Winchesters, and were about to pull when the judge excitedly called our attention to the fact that there was another not 50 feet away, only out of sight showing. This was terrible. We did not flinch. We consulted briefly in whispers. I was to shoot the first as nearly as I could in the butt of the ear, and the major and the judge were to take the other. If the infuriated animals were only wounded and rushed at us we were to drop on one knee and fire rapidly so as to sell our lives as dearly as possible. This was understood. We again took careful aim; the mayor said "Fire!" and we fired. There was a tremendous thrashing around in the bushes. Bear seemed to start up all around us. We dropped on our knees and worked the Winchesters desperately, and the major got out his knife and prepared for close quarters. For half a minute the volleying was incessant, and then we thought we recognized a human voice.

We ceased firing and listened. It was a human voice. The human voice seemed angry, too, and other human voices appeared to be trooping to its assistance. In a moment we were surrounded, and the major was endeavoring to explain to an excited farmer and his three grown sons how it was we had killed four of his best cattle within a dozen rods of his house. It took $80 and a great deal of conversation to smooth matters as regarded the cattle, and then the farmer wanted to know why in the blank we had come to Eel river bear hunting any way, when every blankity-blanked fool in the whole blanked region knew there wasn't but one blanked bear in the whole county and he was in a cage at Ukiah. He said he wished there were bears around there; wished there were some of the old-time grizzlies; he'd help us find one and then skin up a tree and watch him knock the tar out of the whole blanked party. He added that he didn't care a blank if we had paid for the cattle, we couldn't have a steak as the major requested; he wasn't keeping no blanked butcher's shop for lunatics anyhow. In fact he seemed to be considerably annoyed and so we returned to camp. A few minutes later a deputy sheriff rode over from an adjoining farm and requested us to move out of the county. We moved.

On the way back it rained, and our buckskin suits felt like the white of an egg. Then the sun came out hot and they dried up and shrunk so close the major couldn't wink his eyes. We had to cut them off when we got to the hotel, and the judge has just gone out to telegraph for money to buy us some clothes to go home in. The major and I are in bed.—Ukiah

Experience with a Slave Breaker.

Frederick Douglass had something in him that was not the best material from which to make a good slave. He was therefore sent, when a young man, to one Covey, a noted "slave breaker," to have his "spirit broken." Of his experience, there he writes: "I was somewhat unmanageable at first, but a few months of Covey's discipline tamed me. He succeeded in breaking me—in body, soul and spirit. My natural elasticity was crushed, my intellect languished, the disposition to read departed, the cheerful spark that lingered about my eyes died out, the dark night of slavery closed in about me—and behold, a man transformed into a brute! Sunday was my only leisure time. I spent this in a sort of beast-like stupor, between sleeping and walking, under some large tree. At times I would rise up, a flash of energetic freedom would dart through my soul, accompanied with a faint beam of hope that flickered for a moment, and then vanished. I sank down again, mourning over my wretched condition. I was sometimes tempted to take my life and that of Covey, but was prevented by a combination of hope and fear. My sufferings, as I remember them, now seem like a dream rather than a stern reality."—Boston Herald.

He Wanted a Car to Himself.

When the Duke of Sutherland left his 1,000-ton yacht at Fortress Monroe and ran up through here to New York to catch a steamer for Europe his grace was very much bothered by the curiosity of his fellow pasengers in the Pullman, who stared at him as if he were an escaped lunatic. This wasn't the worst, though. Somehow the news of his passage had got ahead of the train, and at every station the doors and windows had as many eyes as Argus, all centered on him. Finally he called the conductor and whispered to him. The functionary shook his head in reply and walked away muttering to himself. "Some folks want the earth for a quarter," he said, when he got out of earshot of the duke. "Why?" "Oh, his nobs there, says 'I can't travel with this mob. Can't you give me a car to myself?'"

By the way, his grace was the worst dressed man in the car—shabby yachting flannels and a battered derby. But this sort of thing is proverbial with peers.—Philadelphia Press.

French at the Church Fair.

We know a San Francisco woman who is so stuck on her newly acquired French that she has forgotten how to read English. She went to a church fair not long ago and was heard to whisper anxiously to her husband: "John, John, mon cher, what is that sign over the booth where that jolie fille is standing? 'Le Monadg?' I know what the ie is, but I can't make out the monade. Oh! Mon Dieu! Think how I shall feel if some one, knowing my proficiency in French, asks me to translate it?" John (who don't care much for French nor for church fairs either)—"Well, I call that plain, ordinary, sour, wet lemonade, and whatever it is it is marked 25 cents a glass, so come away from it."—San Francisco News Letter.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, JUNE 4 .....1887.

The strawberry crop is very light this year.

Mr. T. Boland came up from Keeler this week.

Mrs. Gunn is visiting friends at Independence.

Dr. Woodin makes regular trips to Lone Pine every Monday.

The Lone Pine land case is still going on at the Land Office.

Mrs. Lillie Cook is at Independence and will remain for some time.

Ed. Shepherd is expected back from the Lower Country in a day or two.

Alfalfa is now in the flower and consequently about ready for cutting.

The Conkling boys will soon remove their cattle to Menache Meadows.

Dr. Stevenson has left Los Angeles and taken up his residence in San Francisco.

There will be ripe peaches in the orchards about town in a couple of weeks.

A pretty grove is growing up around the Court house. The trees are all alive and thriving.

Mrs. and Miss Miller and Miss Ida McCall have been at Independence for several days past.

The new church bell came this week and has been put in place. It has a good tone, being loud and clear.

Trout fishing is being indulged in by the local sports. The fish are plentiful and good strings are brought in.

Prof. Ford makes regular weekly trips to Independence to teach the band. The boys are making good progress.

Rev. J. B. Scovil, Evangelist, will preach in Lone Pine, Sunday, June 5, or Second Lord's day, morning and evening.

A number of men are chloriding successfully at Mammoth City. A rich strike is reported to have been made recently.

Work is being rapidly pushed along on the new ware-house for Mr. Rhine. Messrs. Cartier and Steeker are putting it up.

Tom Webb got in from the Long Valley range on Wednesday. He reports everything progressing smoothly in that region.

Ella, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Symmes has been dangerously ill for some time. Dr. Woodin is in constant attendance.

Thousands of sheep are passing through the Valley. Fires can be seen all along the foothills every night that are started by the sheep men.

Thunder showers have been of frequent occurrence lately. There has been a greater rainfall this spring than any for years past.

The warm weather of the past few days is bringing floods of water down from the mountains. Plants and grains of all kinds are growing rapidly.

Mr. Russell will soon commence the erection of a new boarding house at San Carlos. A force of men will be put to work immediately. There is enough ore in sight to repay the amount given for the mine.

Mrs. N. Rhine, accompanied by her daughters, Misses Alice and Emily, arrived at Independence last evening. They will remain about two months. This is the first visit of Miss Rhine to her old home for twelve years.

Last Sunday evening there was a grand display of lightning along the Inyo mountains. Flash followed flash so rapidly that the mountains for a great distance were lighted up as if by a constant blaze. The clouds were so distant that but a faint muttering of the thunder could be heard at Independence.

Notice of Election is given this week on the question of issuing bonds to raise money for the erection of a new school building. This is a much needed improvement. The present structure is a tumble-down comfortless affair alike in winter and summer. We earnestly hope to see the election come off in favor of putting up the new school house. The 9th of July is the day for voting on the proposition.

An innocent man was murdered in cold blood at Rocklin last week. He was being tried for a crime of which, had he lived, he would have been proven innocent, when the brothers of the injured girl deliberately shot him down. The crime of which he was suspected was a dastardly one and the real culprit should be severely dealt with, but the action of the brothers was uncalled for. They have been charged with murder and should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

Cap. Wall: Friends posting notices to the effect that ranches must not turn water into the road. It is a common custom to run irrigation ditches across the road in such manner that wagon springs are broken and much time, labor and annoyance caused. People who do this deserve a good deal of common cussedness in return. We have seen of common cussedness in return. We hear friends putting a flat rock in the road. It is a good and efficient Road Master.

The latest Los Angeles sensation is a case of vitriol throwing. A Mrs. Rosselle, of that place, called her paramour, a man named Poirie, into her room to speak to him. Hardly seated, and as she stood behind him and gently encircled his tresses, whispering words of love, deliberately poured vitriol into his face. A hissing sound of boiling flesh was heard, the effect of the acid being to disfigure him for life. It is thought his eyesight may not be destroyed.

161 acres well improved with good dwelling and out-houses, farming machinery, horses, cattle, etc. Located in the most desirable portion of the valley. Water title. For further particulars inquire of

...y, Bishop Creek.

Forbes, Independence.

Memorial Day.

Memorial Day was duly celebrated at Bishop Creek. Many people from Independence went up to take part in the exercises. Rev. Andrew Clark preached a sermon suitable to the occasion and A. R. Conklin delivered an oration. Bishop Creek is the only place in the county where honors are paid each year to the memories of the preservers of the Union.

Canal Going Ahead.

Mr. Findlay McIvor arrived at Independence at the end of last week from Reno. He brought along machines for canal building and is now at work on the canal for the new settlement near Independence. The work will be pushed along as rapidly as possible, so that water may be got upon the land early in the fall; many of the new settlers expect to be upon their land by that time. Mr. McIvor brought along a quantity of seeds of red gum, Monterey cypress and other trees, and will have them sprouted and ready for transplanting next season. He intends to go into the nursery business extensively.

Wild Horses.

For years past a number of wild horses have been seen at different times in Long Valley. Recently they were sighted and an effort made to capture them. Tom Webb Frank Whitmore, Oscar Hilton, D. Gill and one or two others followed them a day and a half and finally succeeded in getting a rope on a young stallion, which they brought into camp, the rest escaping. The only animal branded was an old mare, with the "scissors" iron on her. When ridden the stallion made no effort to buck, but ran for the hills. He got in with another band of horses, and his rider being unable to get him out, they were corraled. The horse, a well built animal and quite fleet, is being broken by Oscar Hilton.

A Fact For Wine Makers.

Experts in wine making have repeatedly asserted that Owens Valley is destined to become famous for its wines. Here is a case in proof: Recently a barrel of wine made at the Diaz ranch, at Lone Pine, was sold at three dollars a gallon. The buyer is a wine maker at Los Angeles, and he paid the cost of transportation. This wine has such a rich perfume that when a small portion is poured into a glass a room will be filled with fragrance. This barrel of wine is to be used in blending with wines made at Los Angeles to impart bouquet to them. Fortunes will be made by men who have enough enterprise, skill and capital to go into wine making extensively in Owens Valley. There is not yet a winery in the county.

Blood Tells.

Everyone interested in cattle raising in Owens Valley will get a useful idea by calling at the farm of Mr. W. L. Hunter at Georges Creek. Mr. Hunter owns a pure blooded shorthorn bull from the herd of W. J. Marsh, of Fort Churchill, Nevada. The progeny of this fine animal can be compared with other calves in the same pasture, the offspring of an average common bull. The shorthorn calves of four to five weeks old will weigh quite as much as the "scrub" calves of four to five months old. In general appearance no comparison can be made between the two breeds of calves; any man with the slightest knowledge of cattle would rather pay a good price for the shorthorns than take the scrubs as a gift.

Was it Instinct?

If the lower animals do not reason yet many of them do acts that make it very hard to tell where instinct ends and reason begins. Here is a case in point: A number of horses are kept together at Independence; a few days ago a load of alfalfa hay was brought and put in the yard near the stable; one horse was loose in the yard, the other two being tied up in the stable, the door being left open. After eating a few bites of the alfalfa, of which he is very fond, the loose horse appeared to remember that his companions were debarred from the feast; he took large mouthfuls of the alfalfa, carried it into the stable and placed it before the other horses. If reason had any part in the action of the good Samaritan, who shall say that it had no part in the action of this horse?

Having in our official capacity as members of the Plymouth, Pa., Hospital Committee, been asked to test and prove the effective of many different articles to be used as disinfectants in sick-rooms and as preventives of infectious fevers, report that Darbys Prophylactic Fluid has been thoroughly tested during the recent Typhoid epidemic in this place. It proved most efficacious in staying the spread of the Fever.

There are thousands of acres of good pasture land near Lone Pine and yet butter is imported there from San Francisco. Sixty cents per roll is the current price for butter in Owens Valley, and at that figure the supply falls short of the home demand. Dairymen in other parts of the State are making money by selling butter at thirty-five cents per roll. Butter can be made in Owens Valley as cheaply as any where else. There is an excellent opening for good dairymen in Owens Valley.

AVITAL RESTORER

NOT A PROFESSIONAL VISIT.

Some Facts Gleaned From Social and Friendly Calls—How It Ended.

One of our most prominent physicians, and one whose word is authority on matters pertaining to disease and the treatment of the same, was about to take a few weeks' vacation, and thought he would make a social and friendly call on some of his acquaintances and patients, the most of whom were apparently well, and, as they asserted, in no need of a physician's help; yet in nearly every case they expressed feelings of fatigue, nervousness, weakness, or a sense of something wrong. Upon returning home, the doctor began to meditate. "Here are people," he said to himself, "who say they are well, and yet nearly all complain of symptoms which, to the eye of science, are alarming. The hands and feet cold and feverish, dull pains in the head, and unpleasant oppression of fullness about the chest, an 'all-gone' feeling, a lack of ambition, a restless and tired feeling; they are troubled with wakefulness, pains in the side and side, extending down the limbs; neuralgic pains in the head and neck and a desire to be alone. Such are the symptoms threatening these unconscious invalids, who fancy they are well and need no medicine. The fact is, the signs of the disease have unmasked themselves so gradually that the presence of the fatal spectre at the door is undreamed of until almost the last moment."

The doctor gave the matter much careful thought, and his attention was directed to the best method of averting the impending danger which threatens the entire masses. He says these sufferers do not call a doctor because they know from experience that they derive little or no benefit from the course of treatment usually prescribed by medical mind devotes itself to the treatment of acute diseases, chronic diseases are, as a rule, the result of neglected. The derangement of the digestive organs is the direct cause of nearly every form of disease and of all our aches and pains. The undigested ferments are absorbed into the system and blood poison follows. The patient is soon racked with Rheumatic or Neuralgic pains, Scrofula, Salt Rheum and other blood diseases follow; the Liver and Kidneys are badly affected and the entire system debilitated. What can be done? This is the question asked by all after the disease has reached this point. To cure the patient in this condition requires a much more thorough and decided course of treatment than is ordinarily taken at the hands of the doctor says: "There are many that cure these diseases; but fortunately there are but few who seem to understand the secret of combining the peculiar curative properties known to medical science which are particularly adapted to this peculiar form and cause of disease.

I believe the formula used in Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy is the best and most effective combination for this trouble that has yet come to my knowledge, or to the knowledge of the world. I have prescribed it many times, and have watched its workings on very many cases and have seen most remarkable results follow its use; and knowing its ingredients as I do, I am not surprised at its success and power. If this remedy is prescribed when the above symptoms are first felt, all trouble can readily be averted, but if left until the disease becomes seated or chronic, it will require a more extended use of the remedy.

A LUCKY MERCHANT.

Two Portions of the $150,000 Lottery Prize won Here.

At one of the tables in a commercial lunch room on Pine Street, a group of business men were gathered yesterday over their midday repast.

"Heard about the luck of one of the Dannenbaum brothers?" asked a bald-headed old chap who has made a fortune in the hardware business.

"No," said the other in a breath.

"Won $15,000 in the last Drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery."

"You don't say so!" exclaimed a red-faced gentleman who has built a mansion on Van Ness avenue with his profits on paints and oils. "Which one was it, Sol?"

"That's Joe," observed several of the company, and then they determined to try their own luck in the next drawing. The sign of J. & S. Dannenbaum, wholesale dry goods dealers, is easily discovered on Sansome street, between Bush and Sutter. A Call reporter found the fortunate Joseph in his office at the back part of the store filling out blank bank checks. He made no concealment of the fact that the March drawing at New Orleans had made him $15,000 richer. About a week before it occurred he bought two tickets from a persuasive peddler of the coupons who entered his place. One of them happened to be numbered 56,551 and this number drew the first capital prize of $150,000. Joseph Dannenbaum thereupon sent on his certificate for one-tenth of that amount and received his money through the London, Paris and American bank of this city. His firm is well known here and in San Diego and Vallejo, where the brothers have stores.

Another local holder of a one-tenth coupon with the same number received his prize of $15,000 through Wells, Fargo & Co's bank of this city, but he is averse to having his name disclosed and the fact transpired.—San Francisco Call, May 6.

TEA, COFFEE AND SUGAR.

How Some of Gotham's Solid Men Nimbly Hunt the Spry Sixpence.

Part of Wall street is not Wall street at all. Down by the ferry, around Front and Water streets, there is no stock and bond flavor whatever. Things down there smack of China, of Java, of Brazil, and of Cuba, but of nothing nearer home. Down there the big men in tea, coffee, sugar and molasses rule the roast. If there is any boarding house keeper who wants to buy the table luxuries by the ton or the cargo, just drop around, but otherwise stick to the corner grocery. There is where the solid men of New York and Brooklyn nimbly hunt the spry sixpence. At home these heavy citizens are never asked to do anything, but down there on the market they skip around like valets to Mammon. With a panful of green coffee beans in one hand and a little paper of Oolong in the other, they jump to serve their master's whims.

It seems funny to see the millionaire pumping a long flat stick up and down through the bunghole of a hogshead of molasses on the street, running his diamond studded fingers along it, and scooping the saccharine treacle into his gold plugged mouth. He is an expert, but he cannot lick his fingers any better than the rude untutored urchin who steals a lesson at it when the expert turns his back.

Over on the office steps stands a man whose trotters will by and by be spurning the dust of Central avenue from their hoofs. Look at him sifting coffee. How complacently he rattles the sieve. Look at him waft it from side to side, and toss its contents up and down like a pancake. What is he doing? Blowing the chaff out of it. It's a sample, and the purchasing jobber is at hand. He has just roasted a few handfuls in his own little roaster in the office, for he himself bought the coffee green.

Four times a year—in March, June, September and December—the Dutch government sells coffee at public auction in Padang. The Dutchman there measures his coffee by the picul (136 pounds) and values it by the guilder (fifty cents), so the New Yorker just figures out the equivalent of say, twenty cents a pound, and cables his limit to his agents, and they bid the Dutch auctioneer so much and no more. The day after the sale everybody in the trade knows who bought, how much he bought and what he bought at. The conundrum then is: What profit is he satisfied with? What will he sell at!

One funny thing about the Java coffee business is that there are about five times as many pounds of it sold over the grocer's counter as there are grown on the island. As Mark Twain says, this would look like a discrepancy, or hiatus, but we've got to accept facts as we find them.

Coffee from Padang to New York, after a voyage of 100 days, arrives more or less sweated. This part is all skimmed off in Brooklyn warehouses and afterward sold as "skimmings" to jobbers at a reduced price. It was never known to go any further than that, because the retailers never sell you anything but "pure old Government Java."

In the tasting room of a large firm of tea brokers in Water street half a dozen men of critical palates sit around a revolving table sipping tea from delicate china cups. It's a tea party, but what a table! No cloth, no milk, no sugar, no gossip! A circle of cups outside of a circle of canisters, a copper kettle of boiling water, and that's all—strictly business. They sip, and they smack and they spit. A brass spittoon, as high as the table, and looking like a German trombone straightened out, receives all the ejected liquor.

Some time ago New York started tea auctions every week, and Chicago is following suit, but tea is a commodity that loses its flavor very easily, and Chicago's unsavory origin probably has a good deal to do with her failure to rival the metropolis as a tea mart. The Wall street auctions have become quite a social affair. Coffee, sandwiches and napkins are passed around among the guests. When they sit down facing the auctioneer's rostrum, pencils and catalogues in hand, you might easily imagine them a group of reporters sitting in execution on the latest imported lecturer. It is an ordinary thing for 10,000 half chests to be sold. This means 450,000 pounds, and when a couple of spoonfuls make a nice cup of tea look at the delight in store for our grandmothers.—New York Sun.

THE MOB IN THE TUILERIES.

The Story of a Sunday Afternoon Concert—"Profligacy and Luxury."

A most curious event occurred at the palace of the Tuileries on Sunday afternoon, May 10, 1871. There was a grand concert given there at that time under the direction of the communard authorities. The proposed "concours" was widely advertised in the city, and every effort was made to have it a grand success. As its avowed purpose was a beneficient one, the appeal made to the communard population of Paris was a very strong one. The attendance was large and a great amount of money was taken in.

The concert was advertised for Sunday evening, but there was an immense affair in the garden of the Tuileries in the afternoon. There were not less than 10,000 persons present. There was "music with its voluptuous swell;" the bands of a great many regiments, and no less than 1,000 musicians, playing and singing the soul stirring Marseillaise. But it was in the evening that there was the greatest interest. The palace of the Tuileries was thrown open to the public, and the great horde of men, women and children went through the gardens and defiled through the gorgeous and magnificent apartments of the palace.

Though I knew all about the concert, I did not deem it a fitting occasion to be present myself on a Sabbath day; but I sent one of my secretaries to see what was to be seen and to report to me. He stated that what he there beheld was a most remarkable and interesting sight. Ten thousand people filled all the apartments, wandering everywhere at their ease, and examining into every nook and corner of the vast palace. The comments of the rabble were most amusing. My secretary kept along with the crowd everywhere, seeing all that was to be seen and listening to all that was said. Great interest centered in the private apartments of the empress. The gorgeous belongings were everywhere commented upon by the mob. The bath room of the empress attracted great attention. It was represented as very handsome, and as a marvel of luxury, beauty and taste. It was surrounded by heavy plate mirrors. The bath was cut out of solid marble. The ceilings were covered with rich blue silk velvet. The faucets in the bath were of solid silver. All that was seen was described by the communards as evidence of the profligacy and luxury of the court, in the vast increase of the taxes levied upon them. Not one man in the crowd, it is safe to say, had ever paid a cent of taxes in his life.—Exchange.

A BOOK OF CRIMINALS.

London's "Rogue's Gallery"—The Adroit Crook and His Broker.

While at the chief office of her majesty's criminal investigation department at Scotland yard, Parliament street, recently, I was shown what I regard as the most extraordinary book in the world, a book which has never been published and never will be published. Its sanctity is so strictly preserved that even when the authorities want to let a man see something in it, they only show him the one page which will enable him to discover whether the man described on it is the man against whom he has a complaint to make. But by a combination of good luck on one side and good nature on the other it was the present writer's privilege to examine the record during the whole of an afternoon when he was waiting at the office to identify a gentleman from Philadelphia.

This book is the English substitute for the "rogues' gallery" at police headquarters in New York. It is not, perhaps, as useful an arrangement as that of the tinged frames in Mulberry street, for the inquirer is only shown a few such photographs as the police believe will be likely to be useful in enabling him to identify the man he is after. But on the whole it is perhaps a better plan, for the huge number of ugly faces crowded together in the "rogues' gallery" confuse the eye so much that it is not at all uncommon for a man to select half a dozen widely different faces one after the other as that of his despoiler. However this may be, the huge album in London is much more interesting, inasmuch as each photograph is pasted on a broad page on and around the picture, and on the reverse of the sheet is written, in the smallest possible hand, a detailed history of the subject of the photograph, and a concise account of his methods as well as his achievements.

Strange as the statement may seem, the public know nothing of the work of a really clever crook, and the police themselves know very little more. The explanation of this ignorance is a very simple one. A crook whose methods are exposed is a second rate crook. If he lets the light of day strike his operations he is no more a first rate crook than a card sharper who is detected can really be called a good hand at "jumping the cut." But a private detective, or "confidential inquiring agent," as he is more grandiloquently styled in England, if he has had access to the information possessed by the police, and has also had a wide experience in "compromises," really does get at a good deal of curious knowledge.

An "artist," as for convenience an adroit crook may be called to distinguish him from the blunderers who allow themselves to be known to the police, requires two conditions in a "plant." In the first place there must be something big to get away with; in the second place the attendant circumstances must be such that the man who is robbed will be more than willing to cry "quits" and keep his mouth shut in consideration of his getting back a part of the money. Now this is, in statutory language, "compounding a felony," and it is obvious that the man who has been robbed and who is only getting back half his loss does not want to run the risk of being prosecuted in addition to the calamity of being done out of his money. So he does not go to the police at all, and they, therefore, only know about the crooks who are "chumps" enough not to keep to windward of the cold, stale smell of a jail by always studying out the feasibility of a compromise before they "make the rifle."

There are in London and in every large European city a class of private detectives who make a profession of arranging these "compromises," who are neither more nor less than "middlemen" between the public and the predatory classes—in a word, crooks' brokers. The avocation is, of course, open to the grave objection that its practice is essentially a continual breaking of the law; and yet, inasmuch as it enables the victims to get back at any rate a part of their money, there is something to be said on behalf of these brokers. They know the crooks, and the crooks know and trust them. If a crook will make a "fair" deal and let the man he has played get back a "fair whack of the stuff," less, of course, the agent's commission, the broker will never round on the crook. No money could hire him to do it, for if he were once known to have betrayed one of his crooked clients in this way, he would be of no further use to his honest clients, and would lose his business connection in a moment.

On the other hand, however, if the crook is obstinate enough to "hog" it all, or, as sometimes happens, he goes on a "bender" and blows in all the money, gets drunk and loses it, or, is in turn robbed of it, as, by the irony of fate, has sometimes happened to the writer's knowledge, or lets the object of his affections coax it all out of him, the agent will pounce on him and turn him over to the police—this, too, without in the least injuring his reputation as a "square man" with the other artists. They have an undisguised contempt for a crook who expects to keep all he gets away with. They look upon him just as a skillful theatrical manager would look upon some short sighted speculator who got a house full of money and held on to it without giving the audience any "show" in return.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

Two Tests of Death.

There are many persons haunted with the fear of being buried alive, and many believe that such things do often happen. A celebrated English M. D. gives the following test: Have the room in which the corpse lies perfectly dark; have a bright light brought and taking the hand of the corpse hold it near the light and look through it. If the hand has the least pink look like blood there is surely life, but if the hand has the look of clay or grayish look and you cannot see through it death has taken place. Another test is to inject a drop of ammonia beneath the skin, if death has taken place it will have no effect, but if there is life a small red spot will appear at the place of injection. Surely these tests are worth remembering.—Atlanta Constitution.

Danger in Change.

It is doubtless better that boys should be engaged in practising the long jump or the high jump than in blackening each other's eyes; and that pugilism has in a great measure been superseded by gymnastics in our principal seats of education is matter for congratulation. But that is a totally different thing from banishing football, cricket or hare and hounds from school, because sometimes a boy gets a leg or arm broken in a scurry, is occasionally stunned by a cricket ball, or makes himself ill by overexertion across country. Nothing venture, nothing have. If we care for the coolness and the hardihood which we flatter ourselves are national characteristics, we must not shrink from the training by which those qualities are developed.—London Standard.

GRAND SCENERY.

Graphic Description of the Great Stone Face of the "Man of the Mountains."

The vicinity of Franconia Notch, in New Hampshire, abounds in scenery which is wild and rugged, but picturesque beyond description. Such a union of granite hills and grassy dells, of rock, and lake, and river, such a mingling of the beautiful and grand, is to be found nowhere else in America.

The bold outlines of Mt. Lafayette are near at hand, with mountain-top looming over mountain-top in the distance. Here are Cannon Mountain and Eagle Cliff, one on the right hand and the other on the left, forming the walls of the Notch, while nestled in the valley at their feet lies Echo Lake, twin sister of the mountains.

Further to the south is the Flume, a mammoth fissure in the rocks, 700 feet in length, and with perpendicular walls 60 or 70 feet in height; and a little distance away are the Pool and Basin, with other curiosities.

But the crowning feature of the scene is the wonderful Profile, the "great stone face" of the "Old Man of the Mountains," which keeps guard over the Notch, and casts its shadows in the limpid waters of Profile Lake. This is the closest resemblance to the human face which has ever been found in natural scenery anywhere in the world. It is carved in solid rock upon the southern face of Cannon Mountain, and measures 80 feet from forehead to chin, while the top of the mountain is 1,500 feet above the lake at its foot, and nearly 4,000 feet above sea level. The outlines of the face are composed of three great masses of rock, one of which forms the forehead, another the nose and upper lip, and a third the chin.

To obtain this outline in its perfection, one point of view is necessary—a small cleared space, close by the mountain road, and on the eastern edge of Profile Lake. Looking across the lake from this point, the bold outlines of Cannon Mountain loom up but half a mile away, and far up its sides, looking down upon the valley, is the face of the Old Man of the Mountains, stern, bold, relentless, unchanging. "He neither blinks at the near flashes of lightning beneath his nose, nor flinches from the driving snow and sleet of the Franconia winter, which makes the mercury of the thermometer shrink into the bulb and congeal."

Passing down the road, the Old Man's face changes first into that of "a toothless old woman in a mob cap," and soon the entire outline is broken up and the resemblance is lost. Going up the road, the nose and face flatten out until only the forehead is seen.

The profile is said to have been discovered in 1805 by two workmen on the mountain road. It had, however, been known for ages to the Indians, who attributed to it supernatural attributes. They even feared to fish in the lake at its feet, or to sail their bark canoes over its waters, from fear of the stern face which it reflected. Many legends and tales have been related concerning the wonderful face. In one of these it is represented as the face of Christ the Judge—"Christus Judex."

Some one has written concerning it: "Men put out signs representing the different trades; jewelers hang out a monster watch; shoemakers a huge boot; and up here in Franconia, God Almighty has hung out a sign that in New England he makes men."—Woman's Magazine.

MUTES OF ALASKA.

Superstitions Prevailing Among the Natives of the Bleak Territory.

These people have no name as a race, but merely designate themselves as Mutes, a word which means "dweller at or upon." A person born at the village of Tigerach is a Tigerach Mute, and so on. In appearance they resemble the Mongolian type, having prominent cheek-bones, oblique eyes and straight, coarse black hair. If it were not for the thick layer of dirt covering their faces, their complexion would be almost white, and this, with their brown, sparkling eyes, and white teeth, would render them very agreeable to the sight.

A belief in the presence of evil spirits constitutes their only religious idea. There are among them individuals called toonrachs, who perform the general offices of "medicine men." If a person is ill before the whaling season opens, the toonrach is called upon to exercise his skill in driving the evil spirits from the body of the sick person, and from the sea, that the whales or seals may arrive. His operations in almost every case are the same. After a long silence he suddenly begins to roll his eyes, while convulsive shakes penetrate his frame; he gives utterance to groans and sighs, intermingled with sentences pertaining to the subject in hand. During his performance a continuous beating of drums is kept up, and he falls, at the close of his efforts, into actual paroxysms. Froth exudes from his mouth, his eyes glare and roll, and his face is contorted. After a period of rest he regains his composure, begins again his interrupted smoking, and receives his pay for the services performed.

Some curious superstitions are to be found among the Mutes. If one of them is ill, iron tools, such as axes or knives, can not be used in the house. When a man dies, his sled, broken in pieces, is placed upon his grave, with furs, spears and rifles. If he has killed many whales, the long jaw-bones of the balaena are placed over him in an upright position, to mark the spot. The Mutes are accustomed to make a large circuit in passing the resting-place of the dead, and will on no account touch any thing which has been once deposited at a funeral.—Youth's Companion.

WHO KNOW ITS VALUE?

That is a fair question in regard to anything, and as to "Compound Oxygen" it may have the completest sort of an answer by any applicant to Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa., who have names (to whom they may with full consent refer) in nearly every State and Territory of the United States. Judge Kelley, "father of the United States House of Representatives," heads the list of willing witnesses. Every profession and occupation is represented. DR. PRENTICE.

The Successful Specialist of the East astounds the Medical World of the Coast by his Wonderful Operations and Cures.

A few months ago Dr. Prentice visited San Francisco a stranger, yet in that short space of time he has effected so many wonderful cures that his name is now known in every household on the Coast. His cures and operations were so quick and miraculous that some physicians of good standing were even willing to take their oaths that they were impossible. Now in a few months Dr. Prentice has had scores of cases from the leading cities and over the entire Coast that prove the truth of his wonderful cures. Miss Kittie Slocum, employed at No. 817 Sansome street, for seven years had her features disfigured by her eye being fixed immovably in one corner. She could not look straight ahead or turn it up or down. She was treated by various oculists, and last by a professor in a leading medical college of San Francisco, Cal., who treated it for six months; said an operation or further treatment would do no good, so he abandoned the case as hopeless. Miss Slocum, knowing the reputation of this professor to stand high, felt doomed to suffer her misfortune for life, and compelled to exclude herself from many pleasures of this world. Without hope she went to Dr. Prentice just one week ago, and to-day she can look as straightforward as any one. She is cured, and has a new and happy life opened for the future. During the past three months he has cured 538 cross-eyes, of which the following are a few: The most wonderful case is that of Albert Vandenburgh, of Stockton, Cal. Had cross-eyes all his life. Dr. Prentice straightened them in less than 15 seconds. Dr. Prentice's operation for cross-eyes causes so little irritation to the eye that patients return home the same day that the eyes are straightened, not even being obliged to bandage the eyes. Dr. Prentice's success in curing cross-eyes is the wonder and envy of leading physicians in the country. He never takes more than one minute to straighten a cross-eye. He also, in most instances, cures the worst cases of Piles, Fissure and Ulcer of the Rectum in one treatment, without cutting, burning or crushing, so that his patients can return home in from one to three days after treatment. C. M. Henrie, Windsor Hotel, San Francisco, Cal., suffered many years with bleeding and internal piles. Dr. Prentice, in one treatment, made a perfect and permanent cure. OGDEN STEVENS, of the Clara Morris Combination, Baldwin Theatre, San Francisco—Severe cases of Piles and Fistula perfectly and permanently cured by Dr. Prentice in one treatment. His success to the treatment of Catarrh is fully equal to that of the diseases mentioned above. He cured F. Clayton, 2423 Buchanan street, S. F., Cal., of a case of 50 years standing; B. C. Sampson, 1607 Campbell street, Oakland, Cal., had such a bad breath that he avoided company for six years. Baroness Emma Seaman, 132 Fourth street, San Francisco, Cal., deaf from catarrh several years, cured by Dr. Prentice. Mr. L. S. Mastick is a young man well known in this community and in Alameda, where he resides. He had been afflicted from childhood with stammering in a most aggravated form. Hundreds of dollars were spent and the best physicians and specialists were consulted in order, if possible to effect a cure. All this proved fruitless, and the young man came to be regarded by his relatives and friends as an incurable stammerer. Mr. Mastick, however, never entirely discouraged, investigated the claims of all who pretended to be able to cure stammering. A short time ago he met Dr. Prentice, of 626 Sutter Street, and decided to place himself under his care. The young man stated to a "Bulletin" representative yesterday that the doctor cured him in one treatment of a few hours' duration. He now converses as fluently and distinctly as though he had never been afflicted with an impediment of speech. The case is regarded as most remarkable by the young man's friends, and with them, Dr. Prentice is the wonder, as well as the hero of the hour. [Extract from San Francisco Daily Bulletin. The above are but few of the hundreds of cases cured by Dr. Prentice of 626 SUTTER STREET, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. We are informed that the doctor will leave in a few weeks for Europe, so we advise those wishing to see him to call at once.

RUSSELL SAGE

is a well-known operator in Wall street, who is generally considered as "up to snuff." Hence, it may have been quite natural that a countryman who reads the papers recently called at his office and asked for a package of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. He discovered his mistake, but he made no mistake in the article called for. This Remedy, when applied with Dr. Pierce's "Nasal Douche," will surely and rapidly eradicate the most aggravated case of catarrh, with all its unpleasant and dangerous accompaniments.

Quaker Testimony.

Mrs. A. M. Dauphin of 1939 Ridge Ave., Philadelphia, has done a great deal to make known to ladies there the great value of Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as a cure for their troubles and diseases. She writes as follows: "A young lady of this city while bathing some years ago was thrown violently against the life line and the injuries received resulted in an ovarian tumor which grew and enlarged until death seemed certain. Her physician finally advised her to try Mrs. Pinkham's Compound, she did so and in a short time the tumor was dissolved and she is now in perfect health. I also know of many cases where the medicine has been of great value in preventing miscarriage and alleviating the pains and dangers of childbirth. Philadelphia ladies appreciate the worth of this medicine and its great value."

A SUGGESTION TO THE TRAVELING PUBLIC.

Tourists, emigrants and mariners find that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a medicinal safeguard against unhealthful influences, upon which they can implicitly rely, since it prevents the effects of vitiated atmosphere, unaccustomed or unwholesome diet, bad water, or other conditions unfavorable to health. On long voyages, or journeys in latitudes adjacent to the equator, it is especially useful as a preventive of the febrile complaints and disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, which are apt to attack natives of the temperate zone sojourning or traveling in such regions, and it is an excellent protection against the influence of extreme cold, sudden changes of temperature, exposure to damp or extreme fatigue. It not only prevents intermittent and remittent fever, and other diseases of a malarial type, but eradicates them, a fact which has been notorious for years past in North and South America, Mexico, the West Indies, Australia, and other countries.

HOW TO CURE A BOY OF CROUP.

Mrs. Samuel Nutt, of South Haven, Kansas, tells how she saved the life of her boy:

I have been using ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS for the last ten years, principally for a weak back. Not long ago I found my son very much inclined to croup. He had a bad croupy cough, and a wheezing sound in his lungs every time he breathed. He nearly died from the obstruction of the throat. I covered him from the throat to the pit of the stomach with ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. In two hours the cough ceased and his breathing was much easier. In a few days he was entirely well. I kept the ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS on him six days. Since then, whenever he is affected with colds in the throat, I never use anything but an ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER, which cures him immediately, without any inconvenience. They are the best preventive of the croup ever known, and I would not be without them for any consideration.

A CONJUGAL CAUCUS.

Midnight Conversation Between a Fashionable Wife and Her Democratic Husband.

Mrs. Thompson—Are you asleep, Mr. T.?

Mr. Thompson (hesitatingly)—N-no.

Mrs. T.—Prof. Catgut's bill for Arabella's first quarter—

Mr. T.—Humph! How much?

Mrs. T.—Why, my dear, you know his terms as well as I. Sixty dollars for twelve lessons.

Mr. T.—The dev—deuce, I mean! It's the first I heard of it!

Mrs. T.—Oh, you've forgotten. I told you all about it.

Mr. T.—You told me awhile ago that you wanted Belle to brush up her music a little.

Mrs. T.—Yes; and you said very well.

Mr. T.—And on the strength of that you engage a professor at five dollars a lesson! Why, Maria, you'll drive me to the poor-house!

Mrs. T.—I've heard that before.

Mr. T.—And I never see Belle open the piano, either.

Mrs. T.—It isn't the piano; it 's the violin.

Mr. T.—Violin !!!

Mrs. T. (calmly)—Yes; don't rouse the household. The piano is so very common.

Mr. T.—Indeed!

Mrs. T.—Yes; it is so much more effective to have some unique musical accomplishment—like playing the violin, zither or banjo.

Mr. T.—Banjo! Good gracious! I suppose I ought to be grateful for the violin if it has saved me from the banjo.

Mrs. T.—I thought seriously of the banjo, but Arabella's arm is so lovely, I decided in favor of the violin.

Mr. T.—Well, it strikes me Belle shows her arm enough every night, without going to an expense of sixty dollars to further display it.

Mrs. T.—Oh, you don't understand.

Mr. T.—No; I only pay.

Mrs. T.—And while we are on the subject of money—

Mr. T.—I don't know when we're off—

Mrs. T.—I really think you might increase Howard's allowance.

Mr. T.—Well, now, I like that! He has two thousand five hundred dollars a year, and lives at home.

Mrs. T.—I know; and it has done very well so far.

Mr. T.—Oh, has it?

Mrs. T.—But this summer he wants to play polo at Newport.

Mr. T.—Oh, does he?

Mrs. T.—Yes; he is a great expert now.

Mr. T.—Oh, is he?

Mrs. T.—And he wants his own ponies.

Mr. T.—Oh, does he?

Mrs. T.—I think (sobs) you are very unkind (sobs) to talk in that way (sobs). You have no interest (sobs) in the welfare and happiness (sobs) of your children.

Mr. T.—It looks as if I hadn't, indeed, to keep them in the luxury and idleness in which they are living.

Mrs. T. (still tearful)—Well, what can you expect?

Mr. T.—I wasn't brought up so. I worked hard for my daily bread.

Mrs. T.—You hadn't a rich father.

Mr. T.—(with grim humor).—That's so! Perhaps it isn't their fault.

Mrs. T.—You see the children have got to live up to their station.

Mr. T.—Humph!

Mrs. T.—A sort of noblesse oblige.

Mr. T.—Stick to English, my dear, I catch your meaning quicker.

Mrs. T.—And Howard is sure to marry splendidly. He is so handsome.

Mr. T. (facetiously)—Yes—a chip of the old block.

Mrs. T.—There is no doubt that Clara Knickerbocker is greatly taken with him.

Mr. T.—H-m, he might do worse.

Mrs. T.—Worse indeed! Why, they're one of the oldest families, and rich into the bargain.

Mr. T.—Quite a rare combination.

Mrs. T.—Arabella's prospects are not quite so flattering. The dear girl is so fastidious.

Mr. T.—Belle is a little fool.

Mrs. T.—Why, how can you say so.

Mr. T.—Because it is so. Fastidious, indeed! Do you know the way she judges a young man?

Mrs. T.—I know that her standard is very high.

Mr. T.—Is it? Well, at the Lawrence dance the other night, young Brown took her down to supper—a nice likely young fellow—

Mrs. T.—But hardly Arabella's style.

Mr. T.—And when I asked her at breakfast, how she liked him, she said: "Pretty well, but O, Papa, did you notice he put his napkin on both knees?"

Mrs. T.—She is so ultra-refined.

Mr. T.—Ultra fiddlesticks! Another young man wore ill-fitting gloves, a third let his hair grow in an ugly way at the back of his neck, and so on—

Mrs. T.—My dear, you don't understand girls.

Mr. T.—My dear, I don't want to.

Mrs. T.—You ought to be very proud of Arabella.

Mr. T.—I am—she has a lovely arm.

Mrs. T.—And to strive to establish her well in life—

Mr. T.—What shall I do? Advertise for a man who wears his napkin over one knee only, whose gloves are made to order, and—

Mrs. T.—I lie awake half the night, plotting and planning for my children, while you snore serenely on.

Mr. T.—A fair division of labor, Maria. As head of the house, to snore is my inalienable right. Good night, my dear!—Philip H. Welch, in Puck.

DEBT AND EXTRAVAGANCE.

Very few women, who are not miserly, are content to be simple—to live well within their means, having all things in harmony and all things in sufficiency, those which are unseen as well as those which are visible. Most of them prefer an outside grandeur with a skimped and dilapidated interior, so that the world to which they sacrifice shall commend and perhaps envy—seeing nothing of the flaws below the surface. What the family feels does not count; of self-respect there is no question; of the sentiment of thoroughness also is there none.

The whole strength of the management goes to make a show—to have an occasional display—and the debt by which this is brought about troubles the conscience of the lady as little as the discomfort to her family disturbs her feelings. Her friends do such and such things in such and such a style, so must she. She puts her self-respect in emulation—not in sincerity, not in thoroughness—and holds herself worthy of her position in proportion to the extent to which she spreads its pretence and increases its fundamental rottenness. If she gives dinners she goes beyond her home powers, and has to borrow from the outside.

A plain, well cooked, simple and succulent repast, such as she could accomplish without aid, and such as would delight her guests, would be a confession of comparative poverty she could not be induced to make. Wherefore she spends more in a bad imitation of first class cooking than her finances can properly afford and goes into debt for the margin.

What is true of housekeeping is truer still of personal expenses—the milliner's bill and the dressmaker's—with the thousand little fads and fancies dear to the feminine mind and destructive to the feminine sense of honor. To get behind the scenes and into the confidence of certain small traders is to be introduced to the world, which, if you yourself are not one of the debt-makers, seems of another constitution and character from that you have always inhabited. Some women have neither conscience nor compassion—neither thought nor feeling for the poor creatures whom they mulct—the victims whom they cheat.—Emily Craddock, in N. Y. Herald.

WORK FOR WOMEN.

Bee-Keeping One of the Most Agreeable Employments for Farmers' Wives.

Who can keep bees? Anybody possessed of confidence, gentleness, patience and sense. There are persons who believe that the bees instinctively select them for enemies, pursue them and sting. Founded in this belief such persons will never become bee-keepers, but if they should attempt it, throwing aside all fear they would find that the "instinctive antipathy" against them personally did not exist. Man is the enemy of every living thing regarded from the standpoint of the living thing. If it be desired to take eggs from a brooding hen, they are not abandoned because the hen drives her beak into the flesh, or flies into the face of the intruder. The bee-keeper may be stung a hundred times in a season, and yet he has no more fear of bees than of flies. The beginner is advised always to wear gloves with long gauntlets bound to the arm by elastic cords. When confidence is established fully the glove will be laid aside. All bee-keepers wear veils. There may be a few exceptions, but only a few.

Women bee-keepers have been very successful. A bee paper, perhaps the first one of any account in this country was published by a woman who worked out agricultural problems in her own apiary. The "bloomer" costume, or a modification of it, is recommended by some writers. But there is a general dislike for that picturesque dress. The object is gained by having a skirt so full at the hem that it may be gathered about each ankle below the top of the shoe. The material must be strong, but may be light as gauze, and being light and ample will not interfere with any movement. For all there is recreation, exercise, health, and at least twenty-five per cent. profit.

There are two ways to start an apiary, namely, either to buy colonies in modern hives all ready to make harvest, or to buy colonies in old fashioned hives and transfer to modern hives. The latter is the cheaper, and the transferring, even of one colony, will usually rob bee-keeping of any terrors it may have in any timid mind. It is a grand introduction to the whole science.—George B. Stockwell, in N. E. Farmer.

—Do not try to keep geese unless all the conditions are favorable. Geese may be kept at a very small cost or they may entail cost according to circumstances. A pond and pasture will enable them to secure their food with but little aid.—St. Louis Republican.

—"Where will you put me when I come to see your 'castle in the air'?" asked a gentleman of a witty Asylum Hill young lady whom he was visiting one evening. "In a brown study" was the impromptu reply.—Hartford Journal.

PERSONAL AND IMPERSONAL.

—Every member of the Davenport family are on the stage—the mother, two sons and three daughters.

—Jennie June asserts that American women stand at the head for health, complexion, taste and good temper.

—They tell in Cambridge of a Harvard student who burned his hand to punish himself for an exhibition of hasty temper.

—A South Carolina woman has a record of seventeen children in nine years of married life. There were eight pairs of twins.

—The hallucination of an inmate of the insane asylum at Middletown, N. Y., who is worth $500,000, is that he is President of the United States.

—Fanny Rasche, a New Orleans rag-picker, having accumulated a bank account of $4,400 by the time she was sixty, lay down on a pile of rags and died.

—Mrs. S. H. Porter, of Columbus, O., sues a certain French "professor" of Cincinnati, because, instead of removing hair from her face, he disfigured her for life.—Chicago Herald.

—Meissonier offered to paint a picture on a white satin fan belonging to his little grand-daughter. She refused the offer, not without indignation, and said she did not want her pretty fan soiled with his old paints.

—Rob Roy Smith is the name of a Memphis ex-policeman who was arraigned in the police court the other day on a charge of recklessly driving a water-cart, thereby ruining Mr. James Carr's new suit and disgracing two famous names.

—Apropos of monuments to men who deserve them, Rouen will shortly erect by public subscription a statue (in the famous Cathedral) to LaSalle, who discovered the Mississippi. He was born in the old French city, where Jeanne d' Arc was burned.—N. Y. Independent.

—Edward E. Hale tells a striking anecdote of Agassiz. In a great publishing house he saw the proofsheets on a schoolbook of natural history. "Three butterflies," he said, "only three in the book, and not one of these three was ever in America."—Boston Transcript.

—Two extraordinary marriages took place in Suffolk County, N. Y., recently. Justice Lewis, of Babylon, joined Charles Cornelius, a wealthy farmer, aged seventy-two, to Miss Aginette Horton, aged twenty-eight, and at Huntington, Gamael Bennett, a widower of fifty-four, was united to Lillie Jackson, who has just turned thirteen.—Cleveland Leader.

"A LITTLE NONSENSE."

—It is said that bees possess the power of memory. If the bee that sat down on the back of our neck last summer will come round and apologize we won't say any more about it.—New Haven News.

—Mother—"How many times have I called you this morning, Arthur?" Arthur (turning over for a fresh snooze)—"Can't tell you. You don't expect me to keep the account, do you?"—New Haven News.

—Wigwug—"I don't know what I'm to do about that bill I owe at Sontag's; he annoys me fearfully." Wife—"Well, you know if he becomes unbearable you can pay it." Wigwug—"Yes, I can do that."—Detroit Free Press.

—"Maria, what did you do with that pie that was left from dinner yesterday?" "Threw it over the alley fence." "Just like you. Jim Sharkey's two dogs are dead this morning and he accuses me of poisoning them."—Brooklyn Eagle.

—Who's the man?—

My darling's brow's a silken arc,
Of deepest hazel are her eyes
Beneath those lashes long and dark,
As rich and pure as summer skies.

Those ruby lips, so tempting sweet,
To touch them were eternal bliss;
Yet who so bold would dare entreat
The heavenly rapture of a kiss?

—De Baggs—"The purpose of the stage has been misunderstood. It not only amuses, but it instructs and elevates. For instance, you are a heavy drinker, De Kaggs. You should see 'Ten Nights in a Barroom.' It would do you good." De Kaggs—"I don't believe it would. I have frequently seen ten barrooms in a night and I was always the worse for it next day."—Philadelphia Call.

—At the Restaurant.—Guest—"Here, waiter, what's this in the soup?" Waiter—"A spoon, sah." Guest—"No insolence, sir. There's a fly in it; take it away." Waiter—"Skuse me, boss, but dat ain' no fly." Guest—"I say it is. Take it away." Waiter—"All right, boss. But dat ain' no fly. Das a roach, boss. We don' serve no flies yer in wintah time. Dis am a fus'-class place, an' we don' serve nuffin outer season, sah."

—"I wish you would not fill the next pig with cloves," he growled as he sank a carving knife into a well garnished infantile porker. "Why, I thought you liked cloves," replied the wife, with considerable astonishment. "Of course I don't. The flavor of a clove is enough to make a graven image sick." "This is the first time I ever heard you complain about a clove." "Always abhorred them." "Why is it, then, you can't sit through a play without tramping over a dozen persons in your eagerness to get them between acts?" "Ahem! Will you kindly pass me the butter?"—N. O. Times-Democrat.

AN INTERCEPTED VALENTINE.

With Acknowledgments to Dr. Talmage.

Dear cousin Canada, you know we like you,
June and December brighten with your charms,
Not for the world we'd lift a hand to strike you,
There is no war in our presented arms.

See how we flounder through your snow shoe parties,
All breathless down toboggan chutes we slide,
'Neath the soft furs we know how warm your heart is,
For it is always summer by your side.

And if we love you, sweet, and our fond wishes
Fly swift to you like birds of summer hue,
How can you chide us if we love your fishes?
Are not your fishes, cousin, part of you?

How can you set for us a three mile limit?
You cannot hope to make us stay away,
When summer comes, Leander like, we'll swim it
From Anticosti to the Saguenay.

Who talks of bait? By all that's trim and tidy,
You are the sweetest bait our eyes have found,
Come live with us, dear coz, and every Friday
You shall have fish until your head swims round.

Your ma's so busy with her jubilating,
She'll never wonder where you are, and—ah!
Yonder stands Parson Talmage, smiling, waiting,
Say, shan't we ask Sir John to "Ask Mama?"

—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

A Good Catch.

Charley (to his pretty cousin)—Do you know, Maud, I understand that the beautiful girl with Smith ith baiting her trap for me?

Pretty Cousin—Indeed! What kind of a trap is it, Charley—a mouse trap?—New York Sun.

A Chicago Pastoral, as It Were.

It was morning in the Dime museum. The Madagascar paroquet swore at intervals over his cracker; the two tongued lady ran her lingual phenomenon out and in like an Arizona rattlesnake at practice; the Brazilian mandril ceased his desultory chat with a little sapajou from Honduras whom he had learned to love better than life itself, and no sound was heard save the gentle snore of the African lizard "from—the—center of Sahara — and — don't—you—forget—it," which slumbered just as obliviously, just as peacefully as it ever had from its reptilian boyhood, in the Jurassic period, far back in the gray dawnings of worldly time.—Beginning of Sketch in Chicago Times.

Startling Resemblances.

Marcellus—Lodemia, can you tell me why your mother's consent to our marriage is like our marriage itself?

Lodemia—I am sure I can't imagine why.

Marcellus—Because we both thank her for it. See? Both thank her—both hanker—for it.

Lodemia (stiffly)—Ah, that reminds me, Mr. Hankinson, can you tell me why our marriage is like the color of your nose?

Marcellus—No, dearest; I give up.

Lodemia—Because I have about come to the conclusion that it can't come off. See? Can't come off. Come off!—Chicago Tribune.

Vale!

Go, little pass,
I may not bid thee stay,
Though dear thou art to me
And fare.

We part to-day;
Thy like I ne'er expect again
To see,
Though something dearer still
May follow thee.

The change, alas! I greet not
With a smile;
Too dear, 'twill be,
At "two and a half a mile."

—Written by a lady on back of a pass returned to the Burlington railroad.

After the Boodle Still.

Canadian—Now, since we have given you asylum, you'll surely help us in case of war over the fishery question?

Expatriated Cashier—Certainly.

C.—There will be an eager demand for volunteer soldiers, and you may get an officer's commission.

E. C.—Oh, soldiering is not my forte; what I would like would be a sutler's commission.—Boston Budget.

"There is a church at Bergen, Norway, constituted of paper." This is not remarkable, considering that in this country many "valuable gold and silver mines" can be found only on paper.—Norristown Herald.

INSTRUCTION FOR GIRLS.

A Simple Means of Improving the Condition of Young Working-Women.

The frugal, self-sustaining, proud poor, who form a large and important proportion of the community, are obliged, with scarcely an exception, to place their children, both boys and girls, at some lucrative employment at an early age. If they are not obliged to do this from actual, immediate necessity, they are constrained to so place them in order to compass the highly commendable and invariably needed provision for the legendary rainy day and for the time when they can no longer toil for the means of support.

Girls who leave school at from twelve to fourteen years of age to go to the box factory, the artificial-flower maker's or to learn stenography and typewriting in order to fit themselves for office-work, going from their homes, as they must, during the very early morning hours—for a number of months in the year even before it is yet light—and not returning until the evening, when both they and their mothers are weary, have no opportunity to learn even what their mothers could teach them (which would be at best but scant information, having most of them in youth been placed much as their daughters are) of the duties which belong naturally to women. And so it transpires that these girls have no means of learning common household economy, thrift and order, with which one room can be made a place of comfort and cheer, and without which a mansion must be but a dreary abiding-place. A large number of these girls as they come into womanhood marry and become housekeepers, with no idea whatever, in the very nature of things, of the best way to accomplish the thousand and one details of every-day living, each one of which are as important as are the seemingly insignificant bolts and pins of a great machine. However good the intention, however earnest the effort, such women must work against the odds of ignorance for a long time—in fact, often until health and strength give way—before they will have learned from experience to do indifferently well—and even then not without a great waste of time, energy and material—that which devolves upon them.

In the Eastern cities those anxious for the alleviation, bettering and elevation of their kind have formed a series of classes throughout those portions of these cities where the homes of shop and factory girls are located, and in a pleasant, cheery room, fitted up for the purpose, have established a class one evening each week, where a competent teacher gives instruction, in the form of bright, informal talks, as to the best way to do the simple, common things, upon the well-doing of which so much of the comfort and good of life depends. For instance, instruction is given in the small matter of how to build a fire properly without the use of the death-dealing coal-oil can, how to make a broom last well, and so on, up to what to do in case of accident. All those wise little economies of which the poor, who need them so much, are almost wholly ignorant, and which make the difference at the end of the year between comfort and something saved and desolate discomfort and unpaid accounts, are taught. These classes have been a pronounced success where they have been organized. The girls, by questions and the closest attention, avail themselves of all the information offered, and seem fully to realize the practical value of it. There has yet been no work of this kind done anywhere. There certainly is a great field for such effort everywhere.

Industrial education is laying a sure foundation for reform and great good in this direction in the more distant future but a movement which looks to the instruction of working-girls as they are now must meet the needs of the present and the near future.—Antoinette von Hoesen Wakeman, in Chicago Times.

—It is said that thread has at last been produced from the fibers adhering to the seed of the common milkweed. This thread has the consistency and tenacity of imported flax or linen thread and is produced at a much less cost. The fiber is long, easily carded and may be readily adapted to spinning upon an ordinary flax spinner. It has the smoothness and luster of silk, rendering it valuable for sewing-machine use.

—The "art of washing hands" is not an easy one, according to Dr. Haffter, of Trauenfield. To insure absolute surgical cleanliness of the hands they must first be carefully washed with potash soap and water as hot as can be borne, and then with a five per cent. solution of carbolic acid, or one per mille solution of corrosive sublimate or chlorine water.—British Medical Journal.

—During the delivery of his Yale lectures on preaching, some one said: "Mr. Beecher, how is it, in your opinion, that there are so many short pastorates in these days?" "Largely of the divine mercy," was the instant reply, which left the questioner and the audience in some perplexity as to whether the divine mercy favored the churches or the pastors.—Baptist Weekly.

Then by a clamp fasten one of these with the rubber side down securely to each foot of the animal.

Holton, of Ellington, Conn., in a circular space no larger than the butt end of an ordinary lead pencil, the old and new version of the Lord's Prayer, with her full name and the town and State in which she lives. It was conceded to be a remarkable performance, but when Mr. Holton stated that the work was executed in fifteen minutes, with the naked eye, his listeners looked with open-mouthed wonder.—Boston Globe.

—If Mr. Henry Lake's information be indeed correct the year 1887 will be known as that of the rediscovery of the lost violin varnish and the mystery of "Cremonas" will be cleared up. Ole Bull would have been most delighted by this discovery. He gave 1,500 acres of land on which Pittsburgh now stands for a Stainer Cremona, and for many years the chief interest of his life lay in working with the well known maker, Colton, of New York, to reproduce the old varnish. Now somebody has found it by accident, and the secret goes back to Chinese ingenuity and the Jesuit fathers who brought it to the West.

THE PARIS TOWER.

What the Projector of the Gigantic Structure Has to Say About It.

Paris is to have the greatest tower in the world, after all. M. Eiffel's tower, which the Government has authorized him to raise on the Champ de Mars, will dominate all Paris, and surpass, in fact almost double, in height the highest existing structure. Liberty, to whom such homage was paid for her grandeur and greatness, is but a pigmy of the statue world compared with this gigantic monster. Lord Nelson's monument, London, is 162 feet; "Liberty," New York, 220 feet; St. Paul's, London, 300 feet; the Great Pyramid, 460 feet; St. Peter's, of Rome, 507 feet; the Cologne Cathedral, 532 feet; the Washington Monument, at present the highest in the world, 555 feet; and the Paris Tower is 1,000 feet. In order to find out what M. Eiffel had to say to the various objections which have been made to his tower, and to get his opinion on its utility, I called on him the other day at his works at Lenallois-Perret. To him his great projection is synonymous with the success of the exhibition.

"They begin by declaring," he remarked, referring to his adversaries, "that my tower is not French. It is big enough and clumsy enough for the English or Americans, but it is not our style, they say. We are occupied more with little artistic bibelots than giants of bad taste like your tower. But though we are occupied most with art and music, that is no reason," said he, emphatically, "why we should not show the world what we can do in the way of great engineering projects. And as for its being bad taste, why, on the contrary, it will be one of the chief ornaments of the town. One of the most frequent objections made to the tower is that it is useless. That is another error. Take its importance, for instance, from a meteorological point of view. It is not every day that meteorologists can get up one thousand feet above the soil. This tower will enable them to study the decrease of temperature at different heights, to observe the variations of winds, find out the quantity of rain that falls at different heights and the density of the clouds. Indeed, in all that relates to temperature, hygrometry, air currents and the composition of the air, the tower will afford opportunities for study and research, many of which have hitherto been impossible. It will be equally useful to astronomers. Here experience with the spectroscope can be carried on with great facility; the laws of refraction and the physical aspects of the moon, planets and nebula studied in most favorable conditions. I have received testimonies from savants on all these points. Then there is its utility from a military point of view. In the event of another siege of Paris see how important this tower would be. Communication could be kept up by means of optic telegraphy for a great distance around Paris; for from the summit you could have a magnificent panorama extending from 120 to 130 kilometers. Paris by night, decorated and illuminated as it will be during the exhibition, is a sight which before was only within the reach of aeronauts. In fact, the tower will be the chief attraction of the exhibition. Sir Cunliffe Owen remarked to me just the other day: "Do you think that we English will come to look at your little bibelots and pots of pomade? No, but we will come in hundreds to see your tower.'"

"What if it topple over, M. Eiffel?"

"There is not the least danger of that. In our construction of the tower we have calculated on the force of the wind. We have calculated that the tower will normally withstand a wind pressure of 300 kilogrammes per square meter, which amounts to a total pressure of 2,250,000 kilogrammes. We have made this calculation on the most favorable hypothesis possible. We have reckoned the trellis work as full walls, and made other allowances. And as the strongest tempests ever known in Paris have never been beyond a pressure of 150 kilos per square meter, the tower is perfectly secure. Should a wind bearing a force of 300 kilos arise, little would be left standing in Paris but the tower."—Paris Cor. Pall Mall Gazette.

The New Time Table in Canada.

A woman of decidedly national characteristics got off the train last evening, and after wandering about the city a short time accosted a gentleman with, "Will ye be afther tellin' me the time av day it is at the present time, mister?" "Eighteen o'clock," responded the man. The old lady raised her eyebrows, puckered her cheeks, cylindricated her mouth and taught him, saying: "Mister, I am a decent, respectable woman, an' the mither of children, barring the four that's dead and burried, an' I came honest by 'em, for there is a father to ivery wan av thim, an' when I ax you in my own iligant Irish tongue, of which I am complate master, faith an' I want a dacent an' civilized answer to that same. Now, thin, will you be afther tellin' me the time av day?" "Six o'clock," murmured the astonished citizen, and he turned his face from her awful presence, gathered himself together and departed.—Winnipeg Manitoban.

Bombast.

A conceited politician, who had a high opinion of his powers as an orator, and who by his self assertion often forced himself into prominence before the public, was advertised to make an address at the memorial services of a man somewhat noted in his district as a politician and leader of "the boys." In a voice as harsh and metallic as two pieces of iron clashing together, he opened his address with these words:

"It is with feelings of the deepest sadness that I arise to speak of this man, whose joyous soul was released from his rack tortured body at 2:30 p. m., to wing its flight far, far beyond the trials an' struggles 'n' cares 'n' temptations 'n' sickness 'n' disease 'n' tribulations 'n' afflictions of time, to roam along the—the ether strewn vistas of the unseen land, in the mystic shadows of the beautiful beyond."

"Yis, that's a fact, yis, give it to him!" muttered a half drunken listener among the mourners.—Youth's Companion.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

County Official Paper.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

SATURDAY JUNE 18.....1887.

Let the proposed irrigation district be established and every acre of land within it would speedily be worth fifty dollars at least. The total value of land in the district would then be two and a half millions of dollars, or twice the assessed valuation of the whole county at present. Lands are now selling in Los Angeles county for five hundred dollars an acre that for richness of soil and all the elements of fertility are not to be compared to the lands of this district.

A few men who own small bands of cattle may be opposed to the formation of the irrigation district. These men also own land in the district; if they are wise enough to help this move there will be such a boom in real estate that they will gain more in one year from increased value of land than the profits from their few head of stock would amount to in twenty years. With water available for irrigation there would be such a rush of settlers and real estate dealers that values would increase with a rapidity present settlers do not dream of.

Some parties are apprehensive that all lands within the irrigation district whether benefited by the proposed system of irrigation or not, will be taxed for the support of the system, and if said taxes are not paid then the land, even though not benefited, may be taken and sold to pay said taxes. This apprehension is groundless. The constitution itself provides than no man's property can be taken for a public use without due compensation. Therefore, when it can be shown that no benefit is done property must be exempt from taxation.

Again, the Act under which these districts may be formed does not contemplate the taxation of lands that are not benefited. Section 2 of said Act, defining the powers of Boards of Supervisors says: "Nor shall any lands, which in the judgment of said Board will not be benefited by irrigation from said system, be included in the district." Furthermore, the Act makes the Board of Directors of each district a Board of Equalization, clothed with power to adjust all inequalities of taxation. Section 20 says: "On or before the first Monday in August of each year the Assessor must complete his assessment book and deliver it to the Secretary of the Board, who must immediately give notice thereof, and of the time the Board of Directors, acting as a Board of Equalization, will meet to equalize assessments." Under this provision every land owner will have full opportunity for protecting his own interests. No wrong can be done to any person under this irrigation Act. All who are benefited will be very willing to pay the tax, and where no benefits are derived no taxes will be imposed.

SHADE TREES.

Good, Thrifty Trees
One and One-half
Cents Each.

Cottonwood Trees

Averaging 2 feet high, in lots of 10,000, at the above price delivered at Fort Churchill station. Same quantity 2 to 6 feet high 3 cents each. One foot high or less 1 cent each.

10,000 trees can easily be carried at once in a spring wagon.

Such a number of trees planted in nursery rows will soon supply any ranch with abundant fuel, fencing, and shade for stock against the scorching Summer heat.

These trees being indigenous to the soil and climate of the eastern slope and the most wide spreading and rapid growing variety in existence, are the best to plant for farm or pasture shade. Trees 8 to 30 feet high, prices on application.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, JUNE 18 .....1887.

Weather warm and early fruit ripening rapidly.

Crit. Hampton went to Bishop Creek on Thursday.

Miss Minnie Lasky was visiting friends in town this week.

Sheriff Gregg has been at Bishop Creek most of the week.

Horrible fancy costumes for the Fourth of July. Ask Bert Rhine for them.

Mr. J. H. McMurry and Miss Emma McMurry are visiting friends at Independence.

Plenty of vegetables of all kinds are coming into town from the surrounding country.

The town'speople are making preparations for their usual fishing excursions into the mountains.

Mr. Frank Shaw, of Bishop Creek, was at Independence and Georges Creek during the week.

The county sack is now secure; a new safe wrs put into the Treasurer's office a few days ago.

Mr. Castro has leased a building at Lone Pine from Mr. Lasky and will open it in a few days as a saloon.

J. H. Prince, of Hawthorne, is having land broken on a tract located by him two miles east of town.

L. Wood will have a fine assortment of candies and all sorts of fancy articles for the Fourth of July.

New potatoes are still high; at the beginning of the present week the retail price was three cents per pound.

The band boys are making very creditapprogress in their musical studies. Several of the members show decided talent.

It is expected that Aaron Hood will have another trial next month. The last trial cost the county seven hundred dollars.

The influence of the new settlers is being felt. Mr. Rhine is doing more business now than at any time for years past.

The tears and sighs of the Irish people, driven from their homes by brutal violence will be a discord in the Queen's jubilee.

Mr. John B. Monroe, administrator of the estate of his uncle, the late Thomas G. Beasley, has gone back to his home at Tulare.

Mr. and Mrs. Morse and a party of young people from San Diego, rested a few days at Independence this week on their way to Yosemite.

Richards and Castro, of Lone Pine, have dissolved partnership. Mr. Castro has retired and Mr. Richards will continue the business.

Mr. Barter has ripe peaches, the first around Independence so far as we know. By the Fourth there will be plenty of fruit for everyb dy.

About a week ago farmers began cutting alfalfa. Around Independence the first crop will be about an average, say three tons per acre.

Rev. J. M. Spangler left Sacramento last Wednesday for New York; from there he will sail to Montevidio to enter upon the work of a missionary. Mr. Spangler is accompanied by his family.

Mr. and Mrs. Lasky, and Miss Minnie Lasky, of Lone Pine, will leave next week for San Francisco. Mr. Lasky has arranged for a long stay in the city; his sons will continue the business at Lone Pine.

The old crops of hay, grain and other farm products are completely exhausted in this vicinity. For months past hay sold for ten dollars per ton delivered in town; the last corn and oats brought two cents a pound.

After the recent earthquake at Carson Shaw's Springs dried up. The Carson Union says the springs have now started to flow again, and it is expected that the flow of hot water will soon be as great as ever.

When the hot weather starts in a ride of a dozen miles from Independence brings one up into the cool mountain valleys near the everlasting snow. The streams abound in trout and no more delightful spot could be found for rest and recreation.

Filthy water from the Truckee river is used by the people of Reno; it causes plenty of sickness and makes business for the doctors. Yet the doctors are unselfish enough to declare the cause of so much sickness, and to urge measures for the supply of pure water.

G. H. Palmer, of Lone Pine, was at the Land Office last Wednesday making a location of desert land within the proposed irrigation district. Like every other sensible man Mr. Palmer sees clearly that the proposed irrigation district is the most valuable improvement yet started in the county; he will support it heartily.

Correspondence is now going on with the Esmeralda Baseball Club, with a view of having them come to Independence and play a match game on the Fourth of July. If the arrangement shall be made a special train will be run from Hawthorne and a large excursion party will come with them. The matter will be decided in a day or two.

The family of Clanton, who lived at Georges Creek many years ago, will be remembered by the old settlers. Mr. John Shepherd bought his ranch from them. It is reported that Ike Clanton was shot and killed recently in Arizona. Two other brothers are reported to have met the same end.

In a circular from a real estate dealer in Dakota wild lands are offered for sale in that Territory at fifteen dollars per acre. In Owens Valley partially improved land of the most fertile character can be had for the same price. In the genial climate of this valley, lands would be better worth paying for than taken as a gift in the rigorous climate of Dakota or Nebraska.

Sheep License.

The Bridgeport Chronicle-Union suggests that the sheep license passed by the Supervisors of Mono county may be declared constitutional. It says:

"It has been stated on our streets this week that the Supreme Court has declared the Lassen county "sheep ordinance" unconstitutional, and that, consequently, the Mono county ordinance must be unconstitutional. In none of our exchanges have we seen any reference to such decision, and if a decision of that kind has been rendered it may have been on some point that cannot be raised against the ordinances passed by the Supervisors of this county, they being entirely different, the Lassen county ordinance being clearly unconstitutional, and it is strange that the Supervisors of that county should enact such a measure unless they are desirous of giving the lawyers of that county a job, as the principal section of the Lassen ordinance is in direct violation of Article I of the Constitution, which expressly forbids the granting of any "special privileges or immunities to any corporation, class, or individuals." The Lassen ordinance fixes a tax of five cents a head on sheep owned by non-residents and driven into the county for pasturage in that county, but virtually exemps the resident sheep owners who pay State and county taxes on their sheep in that county. The Mono ordinance excepts no one; it is general in its character and scope. Our Supervisors, looking upon the raising, herding, grazing and pasturing of sheep in this county as a business proposition, passed an ordinance classifying it as a business and requiring the taking out of a county license in accordance with the amount of business done, whether the owner is a resident or r non-resident of the county—all are in the same boat, so it does not violate Article I of the constitution. If its constitutionality is questioned, it must be on some other point than the one referred to; and it is not likely that an adverse decision in the Lassen case will have any bearing on the legality of the Mono ordinance.

Worth Visiting.

The Enos ranch is so near town it will repay any one interested in farming for looking over the farm. Mr. Enos is always pleased to receive visitors and ready to show them around. In a Chicago cart he will take a visitor through tracts of blue joint grass as high as the horse and as thick as it can stand on the ground. In other places red clover, red-top and other grasses and plants and growing in rank luxuriance. A large yield of valuable hay will be cut from this ground. The crop of alfalfa is now ready for cutting, and will also be heavy. During the past winter drains were made and now a profitable crop of corn is growing on what was but lately a swamp. The water from these drains was carried on land that was too dry. On another part of the land a band of mares and colts are now being pastured. These are very fine animals, all valuable stock, including the best trotting and draft blood. Mr. Enos says he would like to have his old neighbors in Yolo county walk over the ranch and see the crops now growing. It would, he says, be a new thing to them to see such crops of alfalfa and rich grasses. Mr. Enos has seventeen hundred acres of land in this tract, all of about the same quality.

Fatal Accident

The Enterprise says: "Last Sunday evening, while returning from a trip to Steamboat Springs, by way of the Geiger grade, Eugene Chaumond, an old resident of the Comstock, and proprietor of the well known French Rotisserie, was thrown from a wagon and instantly killed. He left this city on Sunday morning about 7 o'clock, in an express wagon, in company with Louis Amiot and Simon Castine. After spending the day at Steamboat Springs the parties started home in the evening by way of the Geiger grade. The team ran away, upsetting the wagon; Chaumond was thrown out; his head struck against a sharp rock, killing him instantly.

New Settlers.

Last Wednesday Mr. Huntley arrived a Independence from Los Angeles county. He was accompanied by his family, including a married daughter and son-in-law. The party came to settle; they have good teams and wagons; household furniture, chickens, pet rabbits, and babies. Mr. Huntley says he knows land in Los Angeles county that was bought last fall for two hundred dollars per acre and this spring sold for a thousand dollars per acre. He looks for a boom here if the water question is made satisfactory.

Notice to Growlers.

The Committee of Arrangements for the 4th of July will have on hand in a few days a large assortment of costumes which they will rent to parties desiring to participate in the parade, at reasonable figures

Mr. W. Collins, of Warm Springs, has gone to Los Angeles to bring home his family, who have been down there a few months.

Down at Olancha two weeks ago Pap Walker was turning out potatoes as large as goose eggs. Pap says truly, "Give Inyo a fair chance and she'll beat the world on soil products."

William Mooney, the pioneer livery man of Virginia City died suddenly last Sunday morning. Mooney was one of the best known and most generous men of the Comstock; his purse strings were never tied in a hard knot. The loss of his helping hand will be felt.

Mr. Byron McCreary, of the McCreary Brothers, Sacramento was at Independence some days this week. He has located a tract of land about seven miles north of town. Like all who have come here from the Sacramento Valley Mr. Creary said he found Owens Valley a much better country than he had been led to expect from description.

Ed. Shepherd returned home on Monday from a trip to Kern county He took down a band of mules and horses and sold them all. He says grain looks very poor over in Kern, and will not make more than a half crop; this makes a dull market for animals. Mr. Shepherd says that Owens Valley is a far superior farming country to any he saw over the mountains. Here crops can be depended on with a certainty, while over there they have no certainty at all of getting a crop after the farmer has done all in his power to secure it.

The Earl and Countess of Aberdeen are now visiting in this State. The Earl was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland by Mr. Gladstone; he treated the Irish people with justice and kindness and thereby secured their friendship. At all places where the Earl stays on his travels where there are Irish people, they tender him marks of their regard. The Irish have long memories for kindness. More than four hundred years ago a Duke of York was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. He was a generous and kind ruler and made himself so dear to the Irish people that to this day the white rose, the badge of the house of York, is a favorite flower in Ireland.

Superior to Los Angeles.

At this season Los Angeles papers contain many articles on the sulphuring of vines. The fogs that prevail there make sulphuring a necessity or the wine crop would be ruined by mildew. One of the reasons that will make Owens Valley a better wine country than Los Angeles ever can be is the fact that fogs are unknown here and there is no mildew. For the same reason Owens Valley will be one of the best raisin producing countries in the world.

ABOUT FALSE HAIR.

Where It Comes From and How It Is Obtained.

"Nearly all the false hair that is sold in this country," said a hair dealer to a reporter recently, "is brought from France and Germany. It is obtained in those countries from the peasant girls. The Berlin and Paris merchants send their agents out through the country districts, and whenever one of these agents meets a lass with a fine crop of hair he immediately begins to bargain with her. As a rule the peasants know so little of the world, and are so utterly ignorant of the value of things, that they generally sell their hair at the most ridiculously low prices. It is nothing uncommon to see a French peasant girl dispose of the most magnificent suit of hair, a suit that we could sell for $75, for a worthless earring or a string of bright looking beads. If these merchants meet a girl on the road whose hair attracts them they never give the poor girl time to think, or opportunity to go home and consult her parents, but the moment she says 'yes,' out come their shears and off goes her magnificent hair, and the poor child's only return is a worthless trinket. It seems sad, but such is life—at least, hair merchant life.

After the hair has been all collected and brought into Paris and Berlin it is then put through a cleaning process and assorted and arranged. On all hair, as it comes from the head, there is, no matter how clean a person tries to keep her or himself, more or less dandruff. The hair is passed through a sort of wire net or chain, the wires of which are so close together that the hairs themselves can scarcely pass through. You would think this would cut the hair, but it does not. It only gets the dirt off, and it does so most effectually. After the hair is thus thoroughly cleaned it is assorted in proper colors, qualities and lengths. Then the black hair is again run over, and three more piles or heaps are made of it—the long black hairs, the medium and the short. The light hair is similarly assorted. Then the dealers mix the black and light hair together and make from them different shades. By mixing a jet black, for instance, with a color two shades lighter than jet black you get a color exactly one shade lighter, and this is the rule all through the different combinations of hair colors. A color mixed with another color that is two shades lighter than itself will produce a color one shade lighter, and a shade that appears to be perfectly natural. If the hair is mixed with a color that is more than two shades it will produce a streaky combination, which is, of course, to be avoided; but when the mixing is properly done not even an expert can tell the difference between the real color and the color that is the result of this skillful manipulation.

The French are the most expert hair mixers in the world, and many a blonde or brown suit of hair that looks so perfectly natural is, in reality, the product of two different heads and is the result of the ingenious French hair mixers. What does a head of hair cost? Well, of course, there is in hair, as in everything else, an immense variety of kinds, and consequently an immense variety of prices. Heads of hair can be bought as low as $15, and there are many that bring $75. For this latter price I should say that the very best suit of hair that can be found in Boston can be purchased. It does not cost a woman, or, I should probably say in order to keep in the fashion, a Mrs. Lady, as much to purchase her hair now as it did three or four years ago. The Mrs. Ladies do not wear near so much hair now as they did then, as anyone, even a Mr. Gentleman, can see by glancing at one of their heads. Consequently, while it formerly cost a fashionable female from $100 to $150 to perfectly adorn her head, supposing, of course, that she had no hair at all to start with, the same female can now buy the very best head gear in Boston at from $50 to $75. Is there much false hair worn in Boston? Oh, an immense deal of it. I indulge in no exaggeration when I say that there are not five women in 100 who do not wear some false hair."—Boston Herald.

Woman as a Reporter.

The least enterprising editor commonly knows enough, if he wishes a graphic report of some "social event," to send a woman. She will penetrate closed walls through a smaller cranny than any man, see more after she gets there, and bring out her booty in better condition. It does not follow that she likes this aspect of her work; but people naturally come to take a pride in whatever they do well, even if its beginnings were distasteful. Women who correspond with two or three different journals will sometimes lament the taste of their editor for gossip pure and simple, and bemoan the ruthlessness with which he strikes out all their little collateral efforts after artistic or literary expression. There is something appalling in taking half a dozen Sunday papers and laying side by side their columns of minute description.—T. W. Higginson in Harper's Bazar.

Signal Lamps in the Streets.

Signal lamps are now being put up on the streets of New York city. At the middle of the pole is a large iron globe, in which is a telephone, an electric call box and an apparatus for shooting a green glass globe around the gas jet of the lamp from directly beneath. The apparatus is connected by a wire with the police central office, and by pressing a button there the glass globe is made to rise where it can be seen by the policeman on post at a considerable distance during the day and at half a mile at night. The policeman who sees the signal may make use of the telephone to discover what he is wanted for, and in this way a captain at a station may speedily communicate with any of his men who has a lamp post of this sort on his post.—Chicago Times.

—An explorer of prehistoric mounds in Ohio has found carefully wrought hatchets of soft coal associated with human skeletons and bronze ornaments. From the character of the material it is evident that these were meant to simulate axes of flint, and were of no use excepting in burials.—Golden Rule.

—A dispatch from Algeria announces the death of the greatest lion slayer that the world has ever seen. Ahmed-ben-Ahmar, who was last year made a Knight of the Legion of Honor. LANTERNS AND LAMPS.

From the Ancients' Torches to the Burners of Modern Days.

Lanterns are an ancient institution. You remember that Diogenes used one in his eccentric efforts to discover something he did not believe in. The lanterns of the Greeks and Romans contained an oil lamp. Its sides were made of thin layers of horn, waxed parchment, linen or bladder. Glass lanterns were used in England as early as 705. They were expensive, however, and 1,000 years later the tin lantern was chiefly in use among the poor people. The Chinese excel in the manufacture of lanterns. They have used them for ages. Some of their mandarins have them built at a cost of thousands of dollars each. The word built is not out of place here, for these lanterns are twenty to thirty feet high and contain hundreds of candles. Their sides are often of rich colored silk. On Jan. 15 of each year they celebrate the "feast of the lanterns." Why? Oh, it's a way they have—they are heathens, you know.

No; candles are not the most primitive form of light. In Homer's time torches were used, even in the palaces of the wealthy. Rush lights, early in use, were rushes dipped in grease, pitch or wax. Lamp comes from a Greek word—lampas. The candles of Scripture are supposed to have been lamps in which olive oil was burned. The earliest lamps were shallow vessels of terra cotta, either round or oblong in shape. There was a small opening in the top in which the oil was poured; at the side was a handle, and opposite, a nozzle through which the wick protruded. This form of lamp is often represented in pictures. Many of them were ornamented with representations of war scenes and chariot races. Bronze lamps and golden lamps have been discovered of such beauty as to entitle them to rank among the choicest specimens of ancient arts. In the acropolis at Athens, according to a historian, was a golden lamp, large enough so that when filled it would burn night and day for a year. Above it was a bronze palm tree to carry off its fumes and act as a reflector. That was the kind of a lamp to have.

Speaking of primitive lamps, some are still to be found in the country districts. "While in West Virginia recently," said a traveling man, "I saw one that was primitive enough. A saucer was filled with grease, and over the edge of it hung a lighted wick. It spluttered some, but made enough light to render the darkness visible, and its heat was sufficient to light the pipes of the family. It was more used for that purpose than any other, it appeared to me, though it was the only light in the house. There are many people in the mountain regions whose only lights are tallow dips.

A form of the ancient Greek lamp is still in use among the Canadian French. In the remote districts of the land the cruisie, a similar lamp, is sometimes found. Olive oil, ground nut oil, poppy oil or other vegetable oils are used in various districts of the world. In the tropical regions cocoanut oil is used in lamps. The trade of candle making, usually combined with that of soap boiling, was once an important one. Franklin worked at it until he ran away. The chandler made wicks, molded and dipped his candles until driven out of business by the general adoption of whale oil as an illuminant early in the present century.

Improved lamps were introduced about a century ago. A Frenchman named Argand, in 1784, invented a burner with two concentric tubes, the inner one open for a current to pass through and the outer one containing the wick. He had a metal chimney to make it draw and carry off the smoke. Somebody soon found out that a glass chimney was better for that purpose. Argand's lamp, variously modified and improved, is the parent of all the best modern lamps.

Various substitutes for whale oil were tried during the present century, but none came into general use until coal oil was introduced. It was first made from cannel coal, and that is the way it got its name. The general development of the protroleum region in Pennsylvania, which began in 1859-60, soon destroyed the manufacture of coal oil, just as it was getting to be a profitable industry. Many improvements in lamps followed this discovery. But petroleum is not a new thing—neither is natural gas. Oil was found in a spring on Zacyuthus or Zant, one of the Ionian islands, 2,000 years ago, and was burned in lamps in Sicily at an early age. It was known to the Indians and to the western pioneers of America, but somebody had to discover how to get it in quantities and use it before the knowledge became of value to the world.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Portraits in the Newspapers.

Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett has decided views upon the appearance of the portraits of authors and prominent persons in newspapers or magazines. To a correspondent who recently solicited a copy of a portrait of herself for publication in a magazine the authoress wrote: "There is nothing more painful to contemplate than a picture of one's self in a book or newspaper. If one is a beauty one's reputation is instantly destroyed, and if one cannot afford to have any percentage taken off one's good looks the consequences are that one's secret hopes are blasted and one's most timid and modest confidence in one's self forever a ruin."—New York Star.

How the Seal Sleeps.

As they rest in the water, they seem to sleep as sound and as comfortable bedded on the waves or rolled by the swell as they do on the land.

They lie on their backs, fold the fore flippers down across the chest and turn the hind ones up and over, so that the tips rest on their necks and chins, thus exposing only the nose and the heels of the hind flippers above water, nothing else being seen.

In this position, unless it is very rough, the seal sleeps as serenely as did the subject of that memorable song who was "rocked in the cradle of the deep."—Youth's Companion.

—The Louisville Jockey club has completed arrangements whereby in the spring of 1889 there will be run at the course a race of a mile and quarter for a stake of $50,000, called the West Kentucky stake, perhaps the richest ever run in America. The summary is as follows: Fifty thousand dollars for yearlings, two and three-year-olds on January 1, 1886; $40,000 to the winner, $4,000 to second, and $2,500 to the third. The nominator of the winner to receive $2,000; the nominator of the second to receive $1,000, and nominator of the third horse to receive $500, by subscription of fifty dollars each; 300 entries to fill or the race to be declared void at the option of the club.—St. Louis Republican.

DIAMOND CUTTING.

American Work Said to Be Better Than That Done at Amsterdam.

"To what extent has diamond-cutting been developed in this country?" was the query put by the writer to a leading diamond merchant on Maiden lane.

"Well," was the reply, as yet it can hardly be considered as an element in our diamond business. It is, in fact, in its infancy, and its beginning dates back scarcely more than fifteen years. I presume there are not two hundred persons at the most engaged in this branch of the diamond trade, and they are confined chiefly to this city and Boston. There are but few foreigners among them, for a large number of American boys have been educated to the trade within recent years. An apprenticeship is served, I think, in about three years. It is not likely, however, that the work of polishing and cutting diamonds will acquire any substantial position in this country for many years to come, mainly because labor is so much cheaper in Amsterdam, where whole families are engaged in this trade. Whenever the demand for the stones is lessened, these can and do reduce the price to a figure with which it would be utterly impossible for Americans to compete. It would, of course, be a great advantage if we could bring the diamond here in its rough state in large quantities, as we would thereby save the duty of ten per cent. charged on the cut stones. But at the present time the quantity of rough diamonds imported is not sufficient to make any appreciable difference in the price, or to influence the market in any respect.

"There is no doubt about our excellency in cutting stones. We have developed a style which to a certain extent sacrifices material in shaping the stone but it obtains thereby the best effect. This is what is most desired. The credit of the introduction of this new style is largely due to a Boston man, who was also the first to instruct American boys in the art of cutting and polishing. We have also made some improvements in machinery, but the best 'laps' for polishing diamonds are still imported from Amsterdam.

"The wages paid to these diamond-cutters may be considered high, and the more skilled workmen are paid at so much per carat in the rough. The workmen must have good judgment as to the form in which the stone will cut the best. Sometimes a great deal must be cut from the rough stone to get rid of imperfections, and again it is preferable to save material by leaving them. His judgment must decide whether the stone will be more valuable when small without a flaw, or when larger with the flaw. As a general thing there are always imperfections in the rough stones, and the main thing to be observed in buying them is whether the flaws can be easily eradicated. Our city has not yet attained the dignity of being a market for rough stones, and we still go to Amsterdam, London and Paris for our supplies.

"Yes, there are more diamonds sold in this country than ever before, but the increase of dealers has been in much larger proportion than that of the consumers. The demand at present is mostly for small diamonds for making up into ornaments."—N. Y. Commercial Gazette.

Don't Wake in a Hurry.

Never spring out of bed the moment you awake if it is possible to avoid it, and never disturb a sleeping child by lifting it suddenly out of bed before it is fully roused. Fifteen minutes spent in gradually waking up, after the eyes are partly open, turning over and stretching the limbs, set the blood in motion by degrees and equalize the circulation which during sleep becomes somewhat stagnant, and bouncing up a child when asleep sends the blood in an overwhelming quantity to the heart. Of course, some professions, such as the soldiers', the doctors' or the nurses', require rising at once; but unless it is necessary, take your "beauty sleep," as the French call the gradual waking up of a morning.—Detroit Tribune

MRS. MARY O'BRIEN.

As this lady's name has been frequently mentioned on the streets lately in connection with a $5,000 prize drawn in The Louisiana State Lottery on March 15th, a Pioneer reporter was sent to Central City to interview her yesterday. In reply to various questions propounded to her, she made in substance the following statement: "I am a widow 51 years of age; have one boy old enough to help me along in the world; have lived in the Hills nine years; have always worked hard for a living, keeping boarders or any honest work that would pay me. I have a speculative disposition. Have purchased mining stocks and paid assessments on them until I had paid out every dollar I had and was in debt for provisions I had procured from the merchants. I had also put in every dollar of my son's earnings without his knowledge, and it had got to that point where money was an imperative necessity to pay off my debts and keep my mining stocks afloat. One whole night I was unable to sleep, worrying over my embarrassed condition. All of a sudden, as if by inspiration, the thought came—buy a ticket in the Louisiana State Lottery. In the morning I cut the advertisement from the Pioneer, enclosed a $20 bill—all the money I possessed in the world—in an envelope and directed it to M. A. Dauphin, New Orleans, La., with a request to send me one-tenth interest in twenty different numbers. Three weeks afterwards I received a printed list of the numbers that had drawn prizes and, with trembling hands and throbbing heart, compared the tickets with the lucky numbers and found that I had four winners; two had drawn $5 each, one $100, and the fourth $5,000. I now feel that it was a lucky thought that induced me to send the money, and I shall advise all of my friends to take a few chances occasionally; in fact, I am now getting up a big club."—Deadwood (Dak.) Pioneer, April 13.

DR. PRENTICE.

The career of Dr. Prentice since his advent on this coast, has been one of a most remarkable character. Although he came here with a reputation of the highest standing as a physician and surgeon, yet we scarcely could have expected that it would be possible for any man to accomplish in the short space of four months the astonishing results that Dr. Prentice has attained in that short space of time. When we state the fact, which is true, that he has operated upon nearly six hundred cases of tratismus, or cross-eyes, it seems incredible, for this is undoubtedly a greater number than all the combined surgeons of the coast have operated on in ten years. A number of these operations he has performed within one-quarter of a minute, and all of his cases have been perfectly successful, not even one in this vast number have been compelled to wear a bandage, for he causes so little irritation to the eye that no inflammation follows the operation. Many of these cases had been given up as hopeless by the most eminent physicians of high standing on the coast. His cures of stammerers or stutterers that have been treated without any benefit by others, are the talk and wonder of the coast. Cases where people who have been unable to talk or hold conversation from earliest childhood are sometimes cured within one hour. One of these cases is that of L. S. Mastick, of 110 Post Street, San Francisco, Cal. He has made so many cures of exceedingly bad cases of Catarrh, some of over fifty years standing, that a Company has offered him $20,000 for the secret and the right to use them, which the Doctor promptly refused as his own practice is worth at least $75,000 (seventy-five thousand dollars) a year. In all cases of Cross-Eyes, Stammering and Piles, it is necessary for the patient to come to the Doctor's office for at least one day. Although he prefers in all cases to see his patients where it is possible, yet in cases of Catarrah, Female Weakness, Deafness, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaint, by sending a very careful description or diagnosis of the case he is able to effect perfect and permanent cures.

Persons wishing to visit the doctor, or wishing treatment by mail, should send or come at once, as he will positively leave on the 30th of June to visit the hospitals of Europe, which he makes a practice of doing nearly every year. This rare opportunity should be lost by none. His offices are 626 Sutter Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Those wishing treatment by mail can write Dr. Prentice even after he leaves. His letters will be forwarded to him in Europe and his medicines will be promptly sent patients.

THE EFFECTS OF MENTAL EXHAUSTION.

Many diseases, especially those of the nervous system, are the products of daily renewed mental exhaustion. Business avocations often involve an amount of mental wear and tear very prejudicial to physical health, and the professions, if arduously pursued, are no less destructive to brain and nerve tissue. It is one of the most important attributes of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, that it compensates for this undue loss of tissue, and that it imparts new energy to the brain and nerves. The rapidity with which it renews weakened mental energy and physical vitality is remarkable, and shows that its invigorating properties are of the highest order. Besides increasing vital stamina, and counteracting the effects of mental exhaustion, this potential medicine cures and prevents fever and ague, rheumatism, chronic dyspepsia and constipation, kidney and uterine weakness and other complaints. Physicians also commend it as a medicated stimulant and remedy.

Every noble acquisition is attended with its risks; he who fears to encounter the one must not expect to obtain the other.

THE CAUSE OF CONSUMPTION.

Scrofula, manifesting itself in blotches, pimples, eruptions, salt-rheum, and other blemishes of the skin, is but too apt by and by to infect the delicate tissues of the lungs also, and result in ulceration thus ending in consumption. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will meet and vanquish the enemy in its stronghold of the blood and cast it out of the system. All druggists.

A REMEDY FOR CHILLS AND FEVER.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 16, 1885.

Four years ago I contracted a hard cold that settled on my lungs. I had a severe chill, followed by high fever, raging headache, pain on my left side over the lung, and every time a fit of coughing came on, which was every few minutes, it was terrible to bear the pain. I thought it meant an attack of pneumonia, as I went through a two-month siege of that disease, and it came on just the same way. As it was night I thought I would wait until morning before sending for a doctor. Fortunately, a half-box of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS was found in the possession of a friend, who boarded with us. One of these was put on my throat; two on my chest, and one on my back over the left shoulder blade. I then had a hot foot bath. After again getting into bed, it seemed but a few minutes when all my symptoms were relieved; the skin became quickly moist; I coughed only at intervals, and then with very little effort, and in about an hour I was in a sound sleep, from which I did not wake until morning. I resumed business in two days.

EVERYONE SPEAKS WELL OF IT.

Rochester, N. Y., March 18, '86.

For many years I have been troubled with severe pains in the back of my head and neck, the pain being so severe at times that I was nearly insane, and my friends feared that I would be. Lumps as large as a hickory-nut, would swell up on my forehead and neck. I tried many different kinds of medicines and physicians, but none seemed to reach my case, until I commenced the use of Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy, and before I had used it four days, the pain left my neck and shoulders and went to my hips and limbs. I continued taking the remedy, and the disease seemed to work downward, but there was but little pain. I am still using the remedy, and I feel confident it will entirely cure me; for I am so much better and stronger than I have been for years. I cheerfully recommend it to all.

Very respectfully yours,

Lockport, N. Y.

A short time ago I was afflicted with rheumatism so badly that I could not move. My hands and limbs were all swollen. One leg was so badly swollen that I burst the skin. The Sheriff of our County advised me to try Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy, and bought we a bottle. After taking the remedy one day I felt relieved and in less than two weeks I was able to go to work and have not felt rheumatism since. Three bottles cured me, and I recommend it to all who are suffering from rheumatism.

The Caliph and the Peasant.

The beverage of the Arab epicure is dushab, a mixture of nebidh, date wine and dibs (wine juice reduced to a very thick and luscious syrup). From time immemorial this has been the favorite drink of the Bagdad gourmands, and an anecdote of Mohdi, the second Abbaside Caliph, who loved the brew not wisely but well, may fittingly conclude these jottings. Out hunting one day, he took shelter in the cabin of a peasant, who served him with a plain meal of bread and curdled milk. The poor man was so won by the affable manners of the stranger that he presently produced a bottle of excellent date wine. The Caliph took a good draught, and, turning to the peasant, said, "Do you know who I am?" "No," replied the man. "I am a eunuch of the court," said Mohdi. "May Allah bless you!" replied the cottager. The Caliph took another pull at the bottle. "Do you know who I am?" he again asked. "I am one of Mohdi's generals." "May your grave be sanctified!" exclaimed the peasant. The Caliph took a third draught and again said, "Do you know who I am? I am the commander of the faithful." The peasant made no remark this time, but took the bottle from Mohdi's hand and locked it away.

"What does this mean?" exclaimed the Caliph; "give me the wine again."

"Not a drop more do you get," said the peasant. "You drank one and you were a eunuch at court; a second time, and you were Mohdi's general; a third time, and you were the commander of the faithful. If you drink again you'll be the prophet himself!"—St. James' Gazette.

GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY

from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Rose Rash, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, White Swellings, Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE." Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, and vital strength, will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. PIERCE thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have sallow color of skin, or yellowish-brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills, alternating with hot flushes, low spirits and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and coated tongue, you are suffering from Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and Torpid Liver, or "Biliousness." In many cases only part of these symptoms are experienced. As a remedy for all such cases, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is unsurpassed.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by DRUGGISTS, at $1.00, or SIX BOTTLES for $5.00.

Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's book on Consumption. Address, is offered by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy for a case of catarrh which they cannot cure. If you have a discharge from the nose, offensive or otherwise, partial loss of smell, taste, or hearing, weak eyes, dull pain or pressure in head, you have Catarrh. Thousands of cases terminate in consumption.
World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main Street, BUFFALO, N. Y.

$500 REWARD

Dr. Sage's CATARRH REMEDY cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "Cold in the Head," and Catarrhal Headache. 50 cents.

CHINESE PIRACY.

How Celestial Corsairs Conduct Their Nefarious But Profitable Traffic.

Piracy on the high seas is now, fortunately, a crime long since dead among European nations. We must go back to the early period of Marryat and Cooper if we desire to know of the atrocities and iniquities committed by the hordes of lawless ruffians who used to infest the sea at the beginning of the present century and carry on their merciless business of butchery and plunder. Our brethren in the Celestial Empire, however, are slow to remove evils, and piracy with them seems to die hard. Reports occasionally reach this country of some European vessel being attacked in Chinese waters by the natives; but, fortunately, owing to the extreme cowardice usually displayed by the attacking party, these attempted depredations do not often lead to any serious result.

The China sea is, principally, the happy hunting-ground of these dastardly pirates; and nature seems to have adapted it specially for that particular purpose. The China Sea is, in many places, exceedingly shallow, strong currents sweep along its course; while numerous islands, with wooded creeks, dotted here and there, afford capital shelter and points of observation for piratical junks to lie in ambush, until some unsuspecting merchantman shall heave in sight. Vessels in traversing these seas, except during the season of the monsoons, have often to contend against dead head-winds or calms that last for days and days. During these periods sailing ships have frequently, if in proximity to land, to cast anchor, to prevent being carried ashore by the various swift and conflicting currents, and at such times present capital opportunities for the marauders of the seas to carry out their nefarious designs.

Although as the Chinese pirate is, as a rule, a most abject coward where Europeans are concerned, he is, at least, capable of striking terror into the hearts of his countrymen; and a couple of pirate junks, mounting but a single two-pounder gun between them, have been known to blockade a port of four thousand inhabitants, and to plunder every ship that passed. In another case a pirate gang of five hundred, who had yielded to a rush of twenty or thirty bluejackets, had previously defied a native force of one thousand five hundred troops and forty war junks. Directly, however, a small gunboat, manned by Europeans, appeared upon the scene, their career was at an end.

Chinese piracy is, at times, almost a business. A pirate merchant, in the wholesale way, will infest certain villages on the seaboard or islands. He will keep fifteen or twenty junks, with a corresponding retinue of ruffians, and when he has secured his plunder, he stores it in safety. A pirate in a small way of business, having once made a good haul, will divide the spoil, and then his followers immediately disperse for fear of an attack from another gang. The old saying of "dog eat dog" applies with striking force to the transactions of these plunderers of the China sea.—All the Year Round.

RIVAL ROBBER BANDS.

Daring Operations of Two Bands of Midnight Marauders in Paris.

Some recent burglaries which were committed in the suburbs, and the perpetrators of which were arrested, have led to the discovery of two bands of midnight marauders, whose exploits are worthy of record by a Sue. Two leading representatives of Parisian rascaldom, respectively named Poussin and Boutonne, had founded two rival schools of burglary. The Poussinists broke into an isolated villa, the ordinary occupant of which (an officer) was absent. Being unable to carry away all their plunder during the night, they returned to the charge toward morning, only to find their rivals, the Boutonnists, installed in their places. Thereupon a row ensued among the robbers. The disused arms which were hung up as monuments in the officer's museum were taken down from their pegs, and the combatants attacked each other energetically with sabers, the butts of muskets and old-fashioned arms, such as halberds and battle-axes. The sight of flowing blood, however, soon damped the ardor of the antagonistic thieves, and they also feared that the noise of the struggle would be heard by the police. A treaty of peace was accordingly entered into, and the whole gang cemented their union by a grand banquet in the villa at the expense, of course, of its absent owner, whose larder and wine-cellar were requisitioned to some purpose. Boutonne, one of the chiefs, drank six bottles of champagne and one of cognac, after which, being no doubt unable to oblige the company with a song or a recitation, he amused his companions by turning somersets over the chairs and tables, and doing the Gallic equivalent for a double shuffle on top of an Erard piano. After this the amalgamated band worked with the utmost boldness and energy in different suburbs of Paris. They did successful strokes of business in lonely houses, invariably ransacked the meat and wine departments, and left grateful notes of acknowledgement on the dining-room tables for the disconsolate proprietors. In one instance Poussin and Boutonne congratulated a despoiled house-owner on the excellence of his poultry, and promised to return in order to render the customary visite de digestion. The whole of this audacious band, numbering about twenty-five men, has been arrested. Poussin is an old zouave, and Boutonne is a good-for-nothing daredevil of highly respectable origin, who was educated in the School of Arts and Manufactures.—Paris Letter.

THE LIME KILN CLUB.

An Attempt to Burn Its Building Made the Occasion of Some Resolutions.

The thirteenth dastardly attempt to destroy Paradise hall was revealed at 5 o'clock Saturday evening when the janitor arrived to place the hall in order for the usual meeting. Ever since the attempt of last October, bear traps and spring guns have been set at every door and window when the hall was closed, and the would be incendiary was caught, but escaped, leaving a bloody boot in the trap behind him.

As soon as the meeting was called to order the janitor reported the case, accompanied by a war map, and Brother Gardner arose and said:

"My frens, dis incident furnishes me wid an opportunity to address you on de subjick of Goodness vs. Badness. If, when a baby was three days ole, he could reason an' calkilate, he would reason as follows: 'Heah I ar', a sound, healthy boy, wid a big show of growin' up to manhood. De more I kick an' yell an' misbehave doorin' my infancy de mo' spankin's I'll receive. De better I mind an' de gooder I ar' as a boy de easier I will slip along. As a young man I shall be upright an' honest. As a middle aged man I shall act on de squar'. As an old man I shall quit chawin' plug tobacker, read up on de Bible an' go to bed airly.

"Wickedness doan' pay, figger it up as you will. We hev had many instances of it in dis club, an' we ar' surrounded wid 'em at home. When Whalebone Howker stole a wheelbarrer belongin' to Pickles Smith he at fust rejoiced an' was glad. He felt dat he was $2 ahead of de game, and he poked hisself in de ribs fur a smart man. Howsumeber, he hadn't had dat stolen vehickle in his possesshun two hours when his game rooster died, de dogcatcher pickel up his dog, an' a man who owed him $4 went into bankruptcy. He could figger dat he was $8 out of pocket, an' den Pickles foun' out who stole his wheelbarrer an' cum ober an' licked Whalebone widin an inch of his life besides.

"Take de case of Bermuda Jones, who libs nex' doah to Condensed Cunningham. Bermuda set down wid a piece of chalk an' figgered up dat wickedness paid 200 per cent., an' he went ober to de grocery, backed up agin a cracker bar'l, an' while he ingaiged de grocer in a religus discushion wid one hand, he filled his hind pocket wid crackers wid de odder. He started out of dat grocery feelin' dat he was seben cents ahead an' still gainin', but what was de result? A small boy, who was in dar to buy a cent's worf of taffy, seed de hull performance an' told de grocer. Bermuda was follered home, knocked down in his own kitchen, an' made to give up de fo' cane seat cheers in his parlor to settle de case. Did he profit by his badness? Did he make any 200 per cent. on dat?

"Agin, take de case of Kurnel Leflingwell Kabar. I had six Leghorn hens in my coop, an' he coveted 'em. Instead of comin' to me in a frank, honest way an' offerin' to buy dose hens at deir value an' gibin' me his note due in thirty days, he steals upon my coop in de gloom of midnight an' forcibly captivates my poultry. He chuckled to hisself ober his smartness an' he figured up his 200 per cent. profit, but a Nemesis war' on his trail. He left one of de ole blue patches on his pants on a nail in de coop, an' when I found my hens gone I walked ober to his humble cabin an' took him by de neck an' drawed him out doors. Some of you hev probably heard dat he went into a decline soon arter dat, an' dat when de post mortem was held three of his ribs war' found stickin' out of his back.

"I hav figgered on goodness an' badness, an' I tell you dat badness doan' pay. Some of you may hev litted a ham at de co'ner grocery widout bein' caught at it, but yit how did you feel when you met a policeman, or when a strange knock cum at de doah? Guilt was sich a burden on yer soul dat de ham tasted like sawdust, an' you woke up at midnight to see spooks standing by yer beds. De good man goes aroun' wid his hat on his ear, afeared of nobody an' lookin' eberybody squar' in de eye. If he happens to see de patrol wagon gwine along he doan' turn pale. If anybody happens to lay a hand on him he doan't sink inter his bates.

"How ar' it wid de bad man? He's allus lookin' fur b'ar traps an' spring guns. He's allus 'spectin' to be 'rested an' sent up. A strange knock at his cabin doah sends a chill up his back. Go whar' he will, he feels guilty an' afeared, an' some fine day when he am out injoyin' de balmy breeze 'long cums a detective an' claps de handcuffs on him, an' away he goes to state prison fur ten y'ars. You kin figger an' figger, but goodness am bound to come under de wire a full length ahead."

The president's address created considerable excitement, and Waydown Bebee was ready with the following preamble and resolution:

"Whereas, Goodness ar' mos' profitable dan badness, an' also easier on de conshience; now, dar'fore

"Resolved, Dat it ar' de sense of this meetin' dat we stick to goodness."

The resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote, and the meeting adjourned with much good feeling.—Detroit Free Press.

A Sensitive Monkey.

Dogs and other pets are often keenly alive to praise and blame, and seem to know almost infallibly whether they are being well or ill spoken of. The extremest case of which we ever read was that of a canary which died from grief at being harshly addressed by its mistress.

Here is an anecdote which shows that monkeys are not wanting in sensibility of the same interesting and amiable sort. It is quoted from Mr. Bates' "Naturalist on the Amazons." He calls the creature "most ridiculously tame," and adds:

"It was an old female, which accompanied its owner, a trader on the river, in all his voyages. By way of giving me a specimen of its intelligence and feeling, its master set to and rated it soundly, calling it scamp, heathen, thief, and so forth, all through the copious Portuguese vocabulary of vituperation.

"The poor monkey, quietly seated on the ground, seemed to be in sore trouble at this display of anger. It began by looking earnestly at him, then it whined, and lastly rocked its body to and fro with emotion, crying piteously, and passing its long, gaunt arms continually over its forehead; for this was its habit when excited.

"At length its master altered his tone.

"Immediately the poor monkey ceased its wailing, and soon after came over to where the man sat."—Youth's Companion.

Omaha Capitalist—Do you call that a survey of a new railroad? Why, it looks like a pumpkin vine.

Kansas Speculator—Well, you see we had to twist it around a good deal so as to take in all the points at which we could buy land cheap.

"A road like that will never pay. It don't start anywhere or go anywhere."

"Oh! We can keep it running a while on the profits of our town lots; that's easy enough."

"But what will you do after the lots are sold?"

"Straighten it out."—Omaha World.

CARE FOR THE AGED.

Facts Which Should Be Understood by All on Whom Old People Depend.

Virgil's renowned hero, Æneas, received his familiar epithet of "pious" from his loving care of his old father, Anchises. In all times and climes a like care has ever been regarded as a prime demand upon filial piety. One point at which such care may be exercised is in guarding the health of our aged parents, and thus protracting their life and rendering it worth protracting. The generation now nearing its close had its birth and growth when this whole matter was little understood even by the medical profession. All knew that it was a common thing for the old to be suddenly struck down with apoplexy, or hurried to their graves by an attack of pneumonia, or bronchitis due to an ordinary cold. Of such and kindred cases it was said they had died of old age. Life, it was thought, had reached its natural limit; the body was worn out in every part and went to pieces, as a matter of course, all at once, like the deacon's "one-horse shay." Now, as a general thing, we might as well say that a child dies of infancy when its mother does not suitably protect it. The fact is, every age has its tendencies and special exposures.

In old age the arteries lose their elasticity and toughness, and readily give way, especially those of the brain, under whatever quickens the action of the heart. The circulation, too, is feeble, and a slight chill is sufficient to drive the blood back on the internal organs, thus giving rise to various congestions. Indeed, a common cold is often much more dangerous to the aged than small-pox to an adult, or scarlet fever to a child. The recuperative power, also, is so weakened in the aged as to make almost any ordinary ailment a serious thing. The secretions are greatly lessened, so that digestion, especially of meat, is much impaired, and the bowels tend to severe constipation, with its grave evils. Children, and all on whom the aged depend, should not only understand, but be alive to all this. Says Prof. H. C. Wood, M. D., LL. D.:

"A large proportion of those who are said to die from old age, really die from the effects of exposure, and it must be remembered that the term exposure is relative. What in a young man may be nothing, may to an old man be a serious matter. One of the most perfect protections from cold is a buckskin jacket. Nothing else will compare with it. . . . These patients must be guarded especially against exposure to wind—even more than against damp. High winds chill the surface, oppress respiration, and are exceedingly disastrous to the life of any person whose circulation is without power. . . . Stimulating food should be withdrawn. Meat should be used but sparingly. Milk should be the chief article of diet."—Youth's Companion.

SCIENTIFIC HOAXES.

How the Credulous Public Was Victimized by a Missouri Charlatan.

The great lesson which Cuvier taught the world was that many races of animals were entirely extinct, and that nature's chain of existence had not one but many missing links. From his recognition of that fact the science of palæontology may be said to date. But the carnivorous nature of the mastodon was too fascinating an absurdity to be so easily killed, and it continued to appear at intervals. As late as 1835 we find a New England medical professor writing as if it were an unquestionable fact. The giant theory lingered still longer, and even yet can not be considered entirely extinct among the unlearned. The dictum that the superstitions of one age are but the science of preceding ages receives ample confirmation in the history of this subject. Not longer ago than 1846 a mastodon skeleton was exhibited in New Orleans as that of a giant. The cranium was made of raw hide, fantastic wooden teeth were fitted in the jaws, all missing parts were restored after the human model, and the whole raised upon the hind legs. It certainly conveyed the notion of "a hideous, diabolical giant," and was no doubt responsible for many nightmares. As a sad commentary on the state of the medical profession in the Southwest at that time, it may be added that the exhibitor was perfectly honest in his belief, and to support his faith he had a trunk full of physicians' certificates that these were human bones.

In 1840 "Dr." Koch, a German charlatan, created a great sensation by announcing the discovery of the leviathan of Job, which he called the Missourium, from the State where it was found. It turned out, however, to be nothing but a mastodon preposterously mounted. Koch had added an extra dozen or more joints to the backbone and ribs to the chest, turned the tusks outward into a semicircle, and converted the animal into an aquatic monster which anchored itself to trees by means of its sickle-shaped tusks and then peacefully slumbered on the bosom of the waves. Like the Siberians, he found interesting confirmations of his views in his book of Job, that refuge of perplexed monster-makers. Koch took his leviathan to London, where it was purchased by the British museum and reconverted into a mastodon by Prof. Owen, who at once recognized its true nature.—Scribner's Magazine.

Astounding Oil Region Phenomena.

"I see by an Ohio paper," said Grandfather Lickshingle, "that in a well at North Baltimore the drill has struck an oak tree at the depth of 1,000 feet. For fear Ohio newspapers may imagine they have found something new, it may be well enough to remind them that this is an old thing to Pennsylvania drillers. We all remember the well on Oil creek several years ago where a drill penetrated a lumber yard at the depth of 1,500 feet, and began at once to spray pine shingles. I was twisting junk on that well myself, and distinctly recall the intense excitement this strike created in lumber circles There was a genuine panic in the board market, and prices fell off 50 per cent. in a few hours, except at the place where I boarded. We shot the well in the lumber stratum, and she responded nobly with pine and hemlock scantlings of the most desirable lengths, matched flooring, dressed and undressed; walnut and oak plank, and lath and fence pickets, until the whole darned lease was covered with them. I never saw such a sight since I used to run a double back action catch as catch can sawmill at Saginaw. Not the least wonderful feature of the whole thing was a bundle of papers that came up one day after a shot, which proved to be a lot of legal rubbish, notifying us of a suit for trespass and damage. I give the Ohio people credit for having a very nice oil field, but I doubt if they will be able to show us old timers with calloused heels anything new in the business."—Oil City Derrick.

He Paid.

A smart young man who engaged the services of a bootblack at the postoffice corner said, after the job was finished, that he would see the yougster later.

"How later?" demanded the boy.

"Well, in a month or two."

"Going off without paying me?"

"Haven't any change, bub. The smallest I have is a $50 bill.

"I'm verry sorry for you, sir, I don't like to proceed to extreme measures. It's not only agin my conscience, but it raises a row in the street."

"How?"

"Well, as you start to go away, I cry out: 'Stop thief!' That gathers a crowd in no time. You stop and attempt to explain, but I declare that you snatched a dollar from me. A crowd always sympathizes with a boy, and you'll be collared and held until an officer comes. Then we'll both go over in the patrol wagon, and if they don't find my dollar on you some of the detectives will recognize you as Mollie Matches, Billy Burke, Matt. Kennedy, or some other crook wanted in Chicago or New York, and then"——

"Say, bub, what's your charge?" interrupted the young man.

"Five cents, sir."

"Well, here's a quarter for you, I was only fooling, you know."—Detroit Free Press.

She Couldn't Help It.

A pedestrian who was going up Macomb street yesterday discovered a woman sitting on a horse block and making various motions with her handkerchief. He at once braced up, pulled up his collar and smoothed down his coat, and drew near her to scrape and bow and remark that it was a fine day.

"Sorry for you, mister," replied the woman as she folded up her handkerchief and held it to her jaw. "I presume you took this for a mash?"

"Well, ma'am—ahem—you know, I"——

"That's too bad—too bad! you thought I was flirting with you, but I wasn't. It is simply a case of the toothache. Been aching all night, and I'm trying to get up courage to have it pulled."

"Ah! I see."

"It's too bad to put you to all this trouble, but I couldn't help it. It's a case where you really must excuse me."

"I see—ah"——

"I'm glad you do. It's a double tooth. My husband will meet me at the dentist's. Run along, now, and don't feel bad about it."—Exchange.

MEETING THE QUEEN.

An Irreverent American Girl's Description of a Court Presentation.

We entered an inner court, dull and prosaic, except that a dash of color and warmth came from the bright red-coated troops guarding the gates. Then the beef-eaters, ready to open the doors, made me think of Shakespeare, and fancy myself in olden days. We next entered a low-roofed hall, after leaving the carriage. But I felt a cold-cellar-creepy chill quite dreadful and wanted to cry. Then I got into the cloak-room, where the oldest, ugliest maids I ever saw took my wraps and bunched up my nine feet of trained gown, against the time I should have to let it float back. Then I toiled up the stairs to an upper corridor, where was more metaphorical "red tape" in the shape of officers in gold lace duds, "wanting to know, don't you know!" about my pass to the regions of social heaven above. The proper presentation card is six inches square, with the name written out in mammoth letters.

Well, I trembled like an aspen leaf, but, bless you, the man took it as still and calm as if he had been a Stoughton bottle. After that I let down that precious train, and it swept along the ball-room in grand style. The room was lonesome looking enough, done up in scarlet and gold, with never a soul in the whole big place. It leads to the first state drawing-room, and this room has a long line of pompous windows showing over the palace gardens. There stood scores of women in court gowns and more acoming. There are four more state rooms, all equally full of ladies waiting to see the Queen.

There's lots of time to spare, so I waited to talk over and stare over the crowd. It looked splendid to see them all. Every body's hair was dressed alike, then they all mostly had ostrich plumes and veils. A few ladies had the good sense not so wear elaborate stuffs and diamonds. I wish I hadn't—I mean diamonds. All my relations have been borrowed from. And do you know the prettiest dress was one of simple brocade silk with no diamonds or jewels, only a few flowers. It was lots prettier than the smaller gowns and gewgaws. I got downright frightened at seeing the gentlemen-at-arms, who finally threw open the doors from room to room. They had brass helmets, white plumes and all sorts of stagey-looking togs. When I had gotten in the room next to the Queen, I felt worn out—quite collapsed—and wished the old lady farther and myself at home seated down to a good dinner.

At last, with train stretching miles behind, it seemed, I marched one by one with the rest into the royal presence. It was a dreadful moment. But I consoled myself thinking how I'd brag at home about it. I felt like a bit of glass in a toy kaleidoscope.

Looking up eventually, I saw the Queen of England and Empress of India. You know this is the second drawing room of the jubilee year. With the Queen were the Prince and Princess of Wales and Princess Victoria of Wales, attended by Lady Suffield. Miss Knollys, the Duke of Abercorn, etc., the same old crowd of lords, ladies and honorables. Then, Princess Beatrice and Prince Henry of Battenberg were there, but they left that blessed baby of their's in the nursery I presume. I mean young "Alex" of Battenburg, to be sure.

Then the Queen had an awful string of homely old women, regular old tabby cats, hanging around her. The Queen wore a trained black satin; trimmed with black guipure lace, and a white tulle veil, with a diadem of pearls and diamonds. Then she had lots of orders on, until she looked like a little old Sunday-scholar strung about with medals. But when she smiled and bowed I was quite in love with her, she seemed, all at once, so motherly and "real nice."

The Princess of Wales wore red embroidered satin, all done over with showers of poppies. Beatrice wore primrose yellow satin and gauze trimmed with shaded feathers. But before I could say "Boo" the lord chamberlain called out my name. I felt as if I would like to say: "How do you do, ma'am? I hope I see you well; ma'am.,' But I didn't. I just flopped into a curtsey. The Queen, looking tired and bored, returned it. And while I backed out, bowing all the way as is the etiquette required, the Princess of Wales bowed as stiff as a pump handle, and so on I kept, my head going, until the Prince waved a last adieu to us all, ending the royal line. And—drawing a long sigh—then it was all over."—Impressions of a Debutante, in Boston Herald.

Ample Cause for Shame.

A Dutchman who had lost his wife took unto himself a second spouse with a haste that struck his neighbors as somewhat unseemly; so, on the night of the ceremony they tendered him a serenade, with the usual tin-pan and horn accompaniment, at which he waxed extremely wroth.

"De case of Brudder James Warren, of Miner Hill, Tenn., will be fust tooken up," said Brother Gardner, as he opened the meeting and winked to Elder Toots to push another empty herring box into the stove. "Brudder Warren claims dat he am bewitched, an' he has written to dis club to ask it to do sunthin' to drive de evil speerits away. It has got to sich a pass dat de witches take his ole mule outer de ba'n at night an' ride him all ober de kentry, an' Brudder Warren feels speerit hands passin ober his face an' pullin' his ha'r o' nights. Dis club will do sunthin' fer him. If he war a local member we'd cure him in about ten ten minits. As he am an honorary, an' fur away, we shall cross his name off de books an' send him offishul notis dat he am a bounced man."

"I hev repeatedly referred to dis matter of superstishun, an' if members can't de enlightened dey kin be fired out. De day of ghosts, hobgoblins an' witches has passed away, an' de cull'd man who can't believe it has no bizness in dis club. Mebbe dar was a time when witches went chasin' 'round de kentry on an ole raw-boned mule, scarin' people half to death an' leavin' a trail of fiah an' smoke, but things hev changed. De wedder ain't right fer 'em now, an' de purleece giv 'em de collar an' send 'em to de work-house.

"Mebbe speerit hands hev bin laid on Brudder Warren, but I doubt it. I guess Tennessee whisky had a great deal to do wid it. All o' you jist listen to me when I say dat be fust complaint of speerit hands in Detroit will be follered by a scene to make somebody's heart ache! Be keerful how unknown hands pull yer ha'r. De member of dis club who sees a witch had better keep powerful quiet about it or he'll be turned ober to de Kickin' Committee to be dealt wid. De secretary will write to Brudder Warren dat we hev done sunthin' fur him, an' notify our branches at Chattanooga an' Knoxville dat he has bin fired."

The chairman of the Committee on Internal Harmony then announced his readiness to report on the case of Trustee Pullback vs. Whalebone Howker. The two members live in adjacent cabins, and were considered friends as well as neighbors until Trustee gave a molasses candy-pull and invited in a score of friends and left Mr. and Mrs. Howker at home to chew the cud of reflection instead of his candy. Howker appealed to the club, under by-law 98, defining fraternal feeling, and the case has been hanging fire several weeks. The chairman now reported:

"We not only interviewed all de parties, but we ate some of de candy. While we would incouraige a fraternal feelin' among members, an' while we believe dat members orter do mo' fur each odder dan fur outsiders, we mus' declar' our belief dat one member am not obleeged to invite anoder member to the sanctity of his home. In dis case Brudder Pullback knowed dat Brudder Howker has sore eyes an' a bad cough, an' dat his wife was hard o' hearin' an' given to de habit of spittin' on de stove. Deir presence could not hev added to de eclat of de occashun, an' it was fur better under de sarcumstances dat dey be left out. We would an' do unanimously absoive Brudder Pullback from any evil intent."

On motion of Rev. Penstock the report was accepted. He said he was glad the case had come up and been officially acted on, as he lived in the midst of many members of the club, and had been greatly annoyed at their interpretation of friendly feelings. He would lend a brother member a flat iron sooner than an outsider, but when it came down to giving a party he should invite and leave out whom he pleased.—Detroit Free Press.

VERMONT PINE CONES.

Foreign Governments Purchasing the Article at a Fair Price.

In alluding to the subject of rain-fall, and the effect produced by the destruction of forests, one of our contemporaries says: While as a rule we turn up our royal North American noses at the suggestion of systematic forest culture, in Europe the people have learned wisdom from experience. The French and German Governments are illustrating what we might do ourselves, by buying seeds of us. Near Burlington, Vt., some four thousand bushels of pine cones have been purchased at forty cents per bushel, for foreign shipment. They are inspected daily, and as they open are taken to the barn and threshed, the seeds cleaned and placed in bags for transportation. It occupies an average of five men daily for two months to gather the seed from four thousand bushels, each bushel yielding about a pound of seed. There is a branch of this business, nearly double in product, near Charlotte, Vt. The cones are gathered about the first of September, and treated with heated air to expedite their opening. All these are shipped to France, Germany and the other Governments of Europe. Appropos of this subject, some statistics were recently published showing that Lake Champlain is shallowing each year, some of its ports having already become unavailable, owing to the destruction of the forests, the great storehouses of moisture. Some day the American nation will awaken to the knowledge that it has been recklessly prodigal of its trees.—Boston Budget.

—A wealthy lady who has several unmarried daughters was asked why she did not marry them off. She answered: "I have talked to the girls on the subject, and they think as I do—that it would be cheaper to hire a night watchman."

AMERICAN BOOKS.

American publishers are claiming that their bargains with authors are not so ruinous to the latter as is the case in England, and it is probably true that the "profit sharing" system is not so widely followed. Publishers, like Scribner, who allow a royalty, claim that they can not afford to give more than fifteen per cent. on an ordinary book for general reading. Take a book that retails for one dollar, and the cost and the percentages may be figured out as follows:

Author's royalty	.15
Discount to retailer	.40
Cost of manufacture	.25
Plant, advertising, etc., say	.10
Publisher's profit	.10
	$1.00

This of course is figured on the first editions. If a book has much of a run, the publisher's profit is larger as he can use his old plates and is not required to advertise so extensively. Charles Scribner says in this connection:

In this country there has been no complaint, so far as I have learned, that the author does not receive his royalty on the full number of books sold. The only bone of contention is, on the part of the author, that he does not receive a sufficiently high per cent. on the retail price. Well, the market is an open one, and the author is at liberty to choose his own publisher. If then the publisher were making more than a fair profit, some other publisher could afford to give the author a larger royalty, and he would do so. Competition rules among publishers as well as with other people. Publishers have found that fifteen per cent. on the retail price is all that they can afford to pay.

Taking the above table as correct the author is not likely to be very much encouraged at the situation. There are very few men who can collect material for a book that would sell for one dollar, produce the manuscript and read the proof in less than six months. A book that circulates 4,000 copies the first two years is rather above the average as things go nowadays. This is $600 to the author. A $1,200 bookkeeper is financially in a better situation, because he gets his money down. The first item in the above table that might be cut is the trade discount. The dealers, however, complain that they are expected to make twenty per cent. reductions to ministers and schools. These reductions have certainly been carried to great length by the retail dealers, to the detriment of the general public and the author. All of the American publishers complain of the cheap libraries and the trade in pirated foreign books, which make it difficult to offer liberal terms to American authors.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

SMART OLD MAN.

How He Induced an Admirer of His Young Wife to Leave Town.

Old Judge Pennybunker has a young wife with whom a young man named Hostetter McGinnis has been flirting pretty steadily for some months past. At last Pennybunker called the young man into the parlor, and the following conversation took place:

Pennybunker—Mr. McGinnis, I have evidence in my possession that justifies me in saying that you love my wife.

McGinnis—I must admit that it is true.

Pennybunker—I am satisfied that your affection for my wife is no passing whim, but is in the nature of an ardent attachment.

Pennybunker—After what you have said there can be but one result.

McGinnis—I know that. I am at your service at any time. All you have to do is to name the time, place and weapons.

Pennybunker, smiling—That's not what I mean. There is a much better way to arrange this matter. You say you can not live without my wife, and your passion seems to be reciprocated. It would be cruel for me to separate two such loving hearts, I will procure a divorce, and then you can marry the object of your affections. You can then be united according to law.

McGinnis disappears through a side door that leads to the street.

P. S.—Hostetter has left town.—Texas Siftings.

More Mind, More Madness.

It is in no way surprising that insanity should seem to increase in races or classes which are being intellectually stimulated by education. There is always in every community a proportion of brains which, being brought into action, will break down. This proportion doubtless diminishes as the community is elevated, and in a very few generations the result of culture may—probably will—be to develop a better stock, looking upon the people as a whole; but at the onset of the educationary process, and in the generation first taught, the immediate result must be a considerable number of wreckings. This general principle is applicable to all races, peoples and classes, and it explains why the first effect of trying to elevate the negroes has been to produce an apparent increase of insanity among them.—Lancet.

—Ebenezer W. Knapp and J. G. Millspaugh, two aged citizens of Walden, New York, were fast friends for over sixty years. Last Saturday Knapp was engaged in carting away his effects from the post-office, from which he had been recently removed by the postmaster, when he died suddenly of heart disease. The next morning Millspaugh heard the news of his friend's death while sitting in church, and was so shocked by the announcement that he died within an hour. Both were over seventy-five years old and members of the Reformed Church.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

County Official Paper.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

SATURDAY JUNE 25..... 1887

Reliable authorities state that C. W. Craig, ex-editor of the Trinity Journal, will start new paper at Independence within a few weeks.—Bishop Creek Register.

If any idiot takes a second paper into a one paper town he is obliged to be a rat from the day he begins, and deserves the bankruptcy, both in purse and reputation, which inevitably ensues.—Bulletin.

It is said that an inspired crank is about to start another weekly newspaper at Independence, Inyo county. 'Twas ever thus. If a man locates in a town and by hard labor and starvation returns builds up a business so that he can live comfortably, some infernal idiot squats down beside him in the same business and both starve to death. The man who does this is invariably a second-rate hand, who dares not branch out and find a field for himself, but must follow a leader as a noodle-headed sheep blindly tags behind a bell-wether.

Mulholland, publisher of the INYO INDEPENDENT, has labored diligently for several years, surmounting many obstacles and struggling with all manner of vicissitudes, while advertising Owens Valley country and its resources. He honestly deserves whatever profits his little business yields, and is entitled to every cent of it. He publishes a paper devoted to the interests of his section, and the people of Inyo should see that he has adequate support so long as he conducts himself and his paper properly. The business men of that section should give the newcomer to understand that a cloudburst of poverty and hunger awaits him. One good journal is worth a thousand poor ones. The good one should be generously supported; the others should be consigned to the newspaper boneyard.—Carson Daily Index.

ALIAS SUMMONS.

GEORGE H. SANDERSON, Plaintiff, vs. ARGUS RANGE SILVER MINING COMPANY (a corporation), Defendant.

Action brought in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and the complaint filed in the office of the Clerk of said county.

J. W. P. LAIRD and RICHARD S. MINER, Plaintiff's Attorneys.

The people of the State of California send greeting to Argus Range Silver Mining Company (a corporation), Defendant.

You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above named Plaintiff, in the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within ten days (exclusive of the day of service) after the service on you of this summons—if served within this county; or, if served elsewhere, within thirty days, or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said complaint.

The said action is brought to recover a judgment in favor of plaintiff herein and against said defendant for the sum of $2146 27 alleged to be due plaintiff from defendant for and upon certain assigned accounts, claims and demands, as follows: $698 48 on an account stated June 29th, 1884, between defendant and the firm of White and Anthony, and for goods and merchandise sold and delivered to, and buckboard hired to, and money laid out for defendant at its request by said firm; also $99.71 on an account stated June 21st, 1884, between defendant and one H. SATURDAY, JUNE 25 ..... 1887.

MARRIED.

HARRY—WILSON—At Darwin, May 29, 1887, by J. F. Hawley, J. P., Robert Harry to Miss Annie Wilson, all of Darwin.

BORN.

Mr. J. G. Birchim, of Round Valley, is in town.

Miss Emma Uhlemeyer is visiting with Miss Addie Lewis.

John W. P. Laird, Esq., made a trip to Lone Pine yesterday.

Willie Chalfant returned to Bishop on Thursday morning.

The ladies' riding tournament on the Fourth will be a novelty.

Bob Peeler is the happy father of a bouncing baby boy.

C. Mulholland is visiting the Darwin mines and vicinity.

The southern end of the county will be well represented on the Fourth.

Mr. Frank Miranda went to Darwin at the beginning of the week.

Work is being done on the "cinder path" for the sprinters on the Fourth.

Hot, hotter, hottest; in fact, all degrees of heat, but a delightful breeze every afternoon.

Keeler is growing steadily; a large and increasing amount of business is done there.

Mr. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at Camp Independence to-morrow [Sunday] forenoon, at 11 o'clock.

Mr. John Baxter will please accept our thanks for a basket of delicious peaches, the first of the season.

Mr. J. A. McKenzie was at Keeler at the beginning of the week. He is shipping a good deal of ore.

John Hughes was up from Lone Pine early in the week for the purpose of locating land near that place.

We may confidently expect direct railroad communication with Los Angeles in comparitively short time.

Look out for startling appearances in the parade on the Fourth. The Original and Onlys will be out in force.

One of our courts has decided that farmers will be held liable for injury to stock by wire fences owned by them.

Two large irrigation districts are now being formed in Tulare county, near Goshen, under the provisions of the Wright bill.

Every mine operator at Darwin wants to employ more miners. There has not been such a demand for miners there for years past.

Hon. P. Reddy is at Darwin; his mine, the Defiance, is looking unusually well and he is giving attention to some new developments.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr made a visit to Bishop Creek this week for the purpose of seeing his brother, who is also in the ministry.

Another brutal train robbery is reported from Texas. The theives are said to have got away with booty to the amount of seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. John L. Hunt, of San Francisco, Secretary of the New Coso Mining Company, went north last Tuesday on his way to the City from a visit to the mines at Darwin.

A new buck scraper was delivered to Mr. McIvor at Independence Station last Monday. A large ditching machine is on the way from Chicago and is expected to arrive soon.

There being no competing baseball nines the money set aside for that purpose will be devoted to prizes for successful competitors in all kinds of athletic games on the Fourth.

There is a steady increase in the volume of ore shipments from Keeler. About Darwin new claims are being opened up and nearly all the old mines are paying better than ever before.

A decree of divorce has been granted in the case of R. Porter Ashe and Amy Crocker Ashe. The lady will take her maiden name. The child has been adopted by Mrs. Ashe's mother.

A good deal of ore is sacked up at Darwin but there are not teams enough to haul it to the railroad. The ore output of the camp is steadily increasing and would increase faster if more miners could be got.

Several Big Pine Indians have been in town this week locating land in that vicinity. They have ceased their tribal relations and wish to become citizens. They should be encouraged in their good intentions.

Jack Wilson came over from Darwin to Keeler last Monday and arrested a man who was charged with absconding to defraud a creditor. The debt is for a board bill.

The new warehouse of N. Rhine will be completed by the Fourth and the ball will be held in it. It well built structure in every particular; the floor is of the best matched lumber and will be all that can be desired for dancing.

Extension of the C. & C.

Secretary Bender, of the C. & C. and V. & T. railroads, in an interview with a Reno Gazette reporter talks as follows: "The prospect of an extention of the Carson & Colorado railroad to Mojave is excellent. Superintendent Yerington returned from San Francisco a few days ago, where he went to consult D. O. Mills on the matter. Mr. Bender says that Mr. Yerington declines to say just what was said at the conference in San Francisco, but he did say, on his return to Carson, in reply to the question as to the prospects for an early completion of the road, "I am not at liberty to talk to you about this matter, but I can say to you that it will be all right." Some time within three months there will be a meeting of officers of the road and others interested, to consider the question, when a definite conclusion will be arrived at. Work would not be begun in any event until fall, as the winter months are the best to work in that country. The people of Los Angeles are more anxious than the people of Reno for the completion of this road. He is confident that when built the road will be a paying investment, and he hopes and believes that the extension of this road will be resumed at an early day."

Judicious Shoeing.

A short time ago a mare was brought to the blacksmith shop of A. C. Harvey, at Lone Pine, to be shod. Following the mare was an exceedingly well bred mule colt a few weeks old, but so crippled that its owner thought he could have to kill it. Mr. Harvey agreed to cure the animal and succeeded to such an extent that it is now almost well. The trouble was that its front pastern joints were so weak that they were on the ground; Mr. Harvey made a pair of shoes with a piece of iron projecting in front; this prevented the joints from bending forward, but still they turned sidewise; these were removed and bars welded on crosswise; soon after the shoes were replaced the little fellow began to stand erect, the joints stregthening rapidly. These shoes have now been taken off, and, saving the spots where the hair was rubbed off, there is no trace of his former condition. A well known trotting horse on the other side was one similarly treated when a colt by Mr. Harvey.

Irrigation Meeting.

To-day at 1 p. m. a meeting will be held at the Halfway house, George's Creek, for the purpose of holding a general caucus for the nomination of officers for the irrigation district. It is very desirable that all those interested in the formation of the new district should make a special point of attending. It is absolutely necessary to the success of the enterprise that good and efficient men are elected to fill the position of directors. A large sum of money is to be disposed of and the responsibility will be a serious one. Such matters as are not fully understood will be canvassed at length and an endeavor made to place such questions clearly before the voters.

The closing exercises of the Spring term of the Bishop Creek Academy were held last Monday and passed off very creditably. The scholars show much improvement together with ability. Too much cannot be said of the ability of Mr. Logan as a teacher.

H. J. Chickering went south last Monday on his way to Panamint. He had been on a round of visiting with relatives at San Francisco and surrounding country. Mr. Chickering has gone back to Panamint to resume work on the new mill now in course of construction there.

Mr. H. H. Russell arrived at Independence at the end of last week. A boarding house must be built at the San Carlos mine and other outside improvements made before much work can be done in the mine, but work will be pushed as rapidly as possible.

Darwin is by odds the best mining camp now in Inyo county. There is more ore in sight there than any where else in the county. Good miners are urgently needed and all who can be got are at once employed. Hon. P. Reddy, among other operators, wants men to work in the Defiance mine.

The furnace at Lookout has now been running for some time and considerable bullion is already out. For some weeks past Mr. Fitzgerald has been taking out ore that runs away up into big figures. Some of this ore goes a thousand dollars per ton and over, but carries very little lead. Mining men around Darwin say that nothing to equal this ore has been seen in the county for a long time.

On a recent trip to Lone Pine we were shown around town by the genial Charley Begole. The gardens are making an excellent showing; corn at least seven feet high was found. This region is exceptionally well adapted to vineyards; all those visited were loaded with grapes. Small fruits of all kinds are ripening in profusion. Charley never misses an opportunity of interesting a visitor.

Very favorable mention is made of a new invention for pulverizing earth and preparing it for seed. Mr David Lubin, of Sacramento, is the inventor. The machine thoroughly stirs up land that is packed or crusted and reduces the clods to fine powder. It is claimed that by the use of this machine irrigation may be almost done away with for all kinds of crops, but especially for vineyards and orchards.

A painful accident lately happened to White Smith. He was coming down Panamint canyon with his big team; the rope leading from the front wagon to the brake of the hind wagon was slack and he took hold and pulled it tight. The rope was coiled about his hand and just then the front wagon made a sudden rush forward, putting such a strain upon the three-quarter inch rope that it was broken. Mr. Smith was unable to extricate his hand and it was very severely crushed and lacerated.

John Morton has just got finished a nice new building at Keeler. He opened for business a few days ago. Near his business place Mr. Morton has a very cosy and handsomely furnished residence. A real beauty of a rocking chair stands in the front parlor, its arms extended toward the door and just ready to receive the bride of whom the gallant Heenan is now in search. Nothing else is wanting to make him the happiest of men.

A few years ago one of the best bullion producing mines at Darwin was the old Promontory mine. A disagreement among partners led to a suspension of work and it has lain idle until quite recently. A short time ago the property was leased and now ore is being taken out right along. Fifteen hundred tons of Promontory ore average fortyfive dollars per ton and not one ton of the ore was sorted, all the ore in the ledge was taken out just as it came. The mine is now looking as well as ever and the best output of former times will be equalled.

Shooting.

About 9 o'clock on Thursday night a pistol shot was heard at one of the China houses near town. An investigation developed the fact that a Chinaman well known around town as "Old Joe," had been shot at by another celestial who thirsted for his gore. The bullet hit the ground, however, without doing any damage. On the arrival of the Sheriff he was informed that the man who did the shooting had gone to Pat Flynn's wash house; here he was found in the cellar on a bed and placed under arrest. He indignantly denied shooting and claimed that the other shot at him; but being under the influence of Chinese rotgut whisky he was given a night's lodging in the tanks.

Progressive Euchre.

Last Saturday evening a party gathered at the residence of Mrs. V. G. Thompson and took part in a game of progressive euchre. Among the guests were Mrs. Rhine and Miss Alice Rhine, Mr. and Mrs. Conklin and Miss Conklin, Mr. and Mrs. Peeler, Miss Katie Mulholland, Messrs. P. W. Forbes, Henry Mack and Henry Rhine. The royal prize was won by Mr. Mack. The occasion was an agreeable one and impressed the guests with the hope of a similar one in the near future.

THE FIGHTING PROPENSITY.

An Amusement for Which Men and Animals Have a Great Liking.

Men and animals are born with a propensity to fight. Is there in the whole range of the animal creation one animal that does not fight, if it has sense enough and powers of locomotion?

Oysters and clams cannot fight.' If their organ of combativeness is not wanting, they have no use for it. Lobsters fight and are wonderfully voracious. They even devour each other, and may be said to eat themselves; for, changing their shell and stomach every year, these remains are generally the first morsel to glut their new system. The life of all fishes is one of perpetual warfare. The carnage of the sea exceeds that on dry land. Bees fight savagely, both in swarms and singly. Two bees, having a quarrel, go out armed with their deadly stings—more formidable than ten inch Bowie knives—go out of the hive and fight a duel. Ants fight with great ferocity. Armies of ants meet other armies in deadly battle and cover the field with killed and wounded. They also fight duels. This is the case with many other insects. Spiders not only fight, but eat each other like human cannibals. From the elephant to the mouse the quadrupeds fight, even the gentlest, under sufficient provocation.

Cats swear and spit at each other, fur pulling and blood letting being their great delight. A long time ago, one summer night, all the cats in the city and county of Kilkenny were absent from their homes, and the next morning a plain near the city was strewed with thousands of slain cats, and it was supposed that almost all the cats in Ireland joined in the fight, as was shown by collars on the necks of some of the dead bearing the names of places in all quarters of Ireland. There are men alive who knew persons, since dead, who actually inspected the field.

A monkey has been known to whip a large bulldog. We believe the whole monkey tribe as it approaches humanity increases in pugnacity.

Most all birds, from the ostrich to the humming bird, are fighters. The male ostrich frequently administers a chastisement to the female by kicking her heartily around the paddock until she is under control. Whenever it happens that two humming birds meet among the flowers they signal the encounter with a shrill war cry, and dash at each other in fierce antagonism. For an instant they close together, then give each other chase, and with the speed of meteors are lost to view. Shortly after the return of one alone announces that the victory has been quick and decisive. Diminutive as are the puny sprites, they are heavily charged with combativeness. The entire race are pugnacious and quarrelsome, imprudently assaulting each other and birds of much greater size. Even the hawk is not safe from their attacks, and has been seen whipped by them. So excessive is the pugnacity which characterizes the game cock that broods scarcely feathered are occasionally found to have reduced themselves to utter blindness by their combats. When two game cocks meet they have a way of crouching and "pointing" at each other; then they advance with heads erect and fury in every movement, fly at one another, each endeavoring to drive his spur into the head or breast of his adversary. In heraldry the cock is the emblem of strife, of haughtiness, of quarrels and of victory.

As to man—do we not know that his history is a history of war? In the savage state tribes are in continual warfare. In barbarous nations these fierce contests are prosecuted on a larger scale. How seldom were the tribes of Greece at peace! How seldom closed the doors of the temple of Janus in ancient Rome! Read the history of modern nations, and how frequent are the wars, how brief the intervals of peace! It is estimated that nearly 7,000,000,000 of human beings have perished in the battles which man has waged against his fellow creature—man; but there is scarcely a battle of the last three centuries which can at all rival in destructiveness many ancient struggles.

From a rough calculation taken from the returns of those left dead on the fields of battle in which Napoleon commanded, from Mentonotte to Waterloo, we find the amount 1,811,500. The Crimean war caused the destruction of 784,900 lives; the war in Italy in 1857, 45,000; in Schleswig-Holstein, 3,500; our own war, 800,000; the Prussian and Austrian war, 45,000; the war in Mexico and China by the English and French, 65,000, and the Prussian and French war, 100,000—a grand total between 1853 and 1880 of 1,850,000 lives.

What do people not fight and quarrel about? Is there anything that has not been the germ of a "row?" Nothing under the sun, we believe, from a pin to a new baby's name. There was a European contest of twelve years arising out of the mischance of a politician having spilled a cup of coffee on the silk gown of one Mrs. Marsham, who was a sort of genteel waiting maid to Queen Anne, with very great influence over the not very sensible mind of her majesty. In a moment of irritation—and a spoiled brocade would try any woman's temper—she gave advice, which her royal mistress followed, contrary to the pacific predilections of the awkward coffee spiller, and the result was the involvment of England in a long and costly war.—Troy Times.

France's Two Oyster Beds.

The two principal centers of oyster culture in France are at Arcachon and Auray. The bay of Arcachon has since 1854 held a foremost place in oyster breeding. In 1857 there were 20 parts, or district oyster beds; in 1865 the number had increased to 297, with an output of over 10,000,000 oysters. At the present time the little bay, which has a total area of 37,500 acres, has oyster beds covering an area of 15,000 acres, which provide annually about 300,000,000 oysters for consumption. With regard to the oyster beds at Auray, on the coast of Brittany, these, though not so important as those of Arcachon, have still a considerable output, and, from being exhaustive and unproductive when their rehabilitation was first undertaken, have become full to overflowing.—New York Tribune.

Quartets at the Funeral.

Male quartets are the latest things in Gotham funeral services. Upon reading an obituary advertisement a member of a quartet calls upon the family and suggests an engagement. At a recent funeral service, "Shall We Know Each Other There?" "Angels Ever Bright and Fair," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and "Jesus Lover of My Soul," were sung by these professionals with impressive effect, the choristers standing at the head of the main hall stairway, while the friends were assembled in the parlor, and the family gathered on the floor next above. When required, the singers go to the grave. The pay is generally left to the consideration of the family or else referred to the undertaker.—Chicago Times.

WOMEN IN RUSSIA.

A Picture of Russian Home Life in the Time of Ivan the Terrible.

In Mr. Nathan Haskell Dole's recent lecture on the "Rise of Russian Literature," he spoke of the "Domostroi, or Book of Domestic Management," written by the Pope Sylvester for the edification of his only son, Anphim and his daughter-in-law Pelagia.

It was composed early in the sixteenth century, during the reign of Ivan the Terrible, and throws a curious light on Russian society at that time.

For many years it was the universal vade mecum of household duties. It may interest some of the women of Philadelphia who did not hear Mr. Dole's lecture to see what the old priest laid down as law for the treatment and behavior of their sisters three centuries and a half ago. Mr. Dole's translation was as follows:

She must go to church as often as possible and consult with her husband. Husbands must teach their wives with love and reasonable punishment. If the wife live not according to her husband's teaching then the husband must punish her alone by themselves, and after he has punished her he must forgive her and give further advice; but they must not be angry with one another.

Servants and children must be punished according to their guilt, and wounds must be inflicted, but after the punishment forgive the sin. But the mistress of the house must look after the servants as to what is fitting for the same. But when it is necessary to reprehend your wife, your son or your daughter, or to punish them by laying on the whip, punish them not before people, but alone. Strike them not on the ear or in the face or on the head with the fist, nor kick them or strike them with the staff, either of iron or of wood. But if the sin be great, then, stripping off the garment, apply a little whip discreetly, holding the hands. Wives must ask their husbands about all holy teaching, and be subject to them in all things.

Every day the husband and wife should question each other and take counsel about the whole conduct of the house. She must have acquaintance only with those whom her husband commands. She may converse with guests about her handiwork and about household management, and listen when she sees that it is good. What she does not know she may ask modestly. Whatever any one commands she must "beat the forehead" humbly, and when she goes forth from the house she must tell all things to her husband.

She may meet socially with good women not for eating and drinking, but for good conversation and knowledge; she must take care of her appearance and not indulge in laughter and not gossip; if any one asks her about any thing she must reply: "I know not; I have heard nothing about it, and as for me, I ask not about unnecessary things and I do not talk about princes, and boyars and my neighbors." In nowise indulge in drunkenness; a woman may drink beer, Kvas, both at home and abroad, but she must not eat and drink secretly away from her husband; the wise woman does not entertain the stranger without her husband's presence. In regard to all things consult with the husband and not with the slave and not with the serf.—Philadelphia Call.

SUBMISSION OF WIVES.

A Social and Domestic Question of Considerable Interest and Importance.

How far this submitting unto one's own husband should be carried, is a question for consideration. True it is that wifely submission is not in much danger of being carried to excess in this age of woman's rights; and yet one sometimes sees an exception in the person of a meek woman, who, partly through fear, and partly through a mistaken notion of duty, merges her sentiments, her ideas, her very self in her husband. She loses her own identity, and becomes simply his echo.

This would be less deplorable than it is if the husband who thus absorbs her were always a superior character (for such women are always weak and would not amount to much in themselves). But sad as it is, these oaks to which such tender vines cling are not always the strong supports they should be.

When a man is selfish, tyrannical and dishonest, so much so that he even finds himself almost without friends, must his gentle wife, who is capable of winning friends by her own lovely character, renounce every hope of happiness, of friendship, of the pleasure of society, by frowning upon all who disagree with him, forsaking all who disapprove his meanness, and making strangers feel that she is as bad as himself? I can not think it right. It is too much for one soul to require of another! Too much in the wrong direction. It is beautiful to see a wife love and seek to save her husband, all the more as he becomes a "sinking ship;" but if she can not save him, if he will deliberately sink, she is not, I believe, required to sink with him to the extent of wrecking her own life. Woman has individuality of her own, a character of her own to maintain just as much as man. It is as valuable to her as her husband's is to him; and she is fully as strong to maintain it. The best of men admit that only in a physical sense is she "the weaker sex;" but a mournful exception is the woman who adds the folly of allowing herself to become the echo of a hollow, brazen vessel, to the mistake of having become his wife.—Christian at Work.

Latter Day Saints in Ohio.

An interesting revival of Mormonism is going on at Kirtland, O., the place where this curious faith was first promulgated. The old temple is undergoing repairs, and a new community of Latter Day saints is growing up about it. They do not believe in or practice polygamy, and so long as they do not break the laws of Ohio nobody objects to them. In the business of special revelations, however, they are up to their old leaders. Elder Kelley has one every few days in regard to the restoration of the temple, which is to be according to the original design. But it is a little curious that for details he consults the old residents of the neighborhood who remember just how the building looked when it was first finished.—Frank Leslie's.

FINE TABLE LINEN.

Elegant Patterns for Table-Cloths, Napkins, Luncheon Sets and Doylies.

Even more enthusiasm is felt for choice table-linen than for bed-linen, and this is quite reasonable, because the opportunities for admiring it are more numerous. For table service nothing is too dainty, nothing too beautiful, and so must have thought the designers of the snowy covers and napkins, the exquisite doylies and the handsome luncheon sets. The best patterns are now found in table-cloths that are sold by the yard, as well as in those woven separately with a border on all sides. In woven cloths the sizes vary, so that a cover for a very large as well as a very small table is obtainable. Among the newest and most effective weavings is one known as crackle work, the design reproducing the effect of crackle ware. In the angles formed by the converging lines of one cover having the crackle weaving are acorns; and upon another are realistic-looking daisies. Another cover has large clover-leaves strewn singly over it, and still another has peaches brought out in beautiful luster. The design of the border is often different from the center. For instance, the cloth having a large clover-leaf design has five-pointed stars between two Greek scrolls for its border; that having peaches upon it has an architectural design that looks like a Corinthian cornice surmounted by spear-heads in groups of three.

Napkins match the table covers in design and vary in size from twenty-one to thirty inches. They are usually square, but what is known as a French napkin is oblong. It is noticeable that French table-linen displays very airy designs, with a leaning toward roses, palms and other floral patterns; but the demand for it is only in the best qualities. Its beautiful luster must always be admired even while the durability and beauty of Irish goods of the best class are conceded. Indeed, in the development of flax products each county where the plant is raised seems to have paid special attention to the development of some particular result. Scotch goods, even in their lowest grades, yield good service; while in the medium qualities German linens are unsurpassed.

The question is sometimes asked whether the same style of table linen is used for breakfast as for dinner. This depends on many things, principal among which are the circumstances governing the service of the morning meal. A white cover is never out of place upon the breakfast table, but it is not essential to the proper serving of the light repast which often precedes an early dinner. Breakfast napkins are smaller than those used at dinner.

Of course, everybody's taste is not suited by a cover of white linen, no matter how fine or how beautiful it may be, and at ceremonious dinners the center of the cloth is sometimes overlaid with a square of linen showing elaborate drawn-work. Sometimes a stripe of drawn-work extends through the center or along each side of the cover, showing a stripe of satin or plush placed underneath.

Luncheon sets invite the use of much ornamentation, and many adjectives might be employed in their description. Perhaps the briefest summary of their beauty may be expressed by saying that they are very artistic. Holbein sets, which at a little distance appear to be of a single faint color, display upon inspection two colors upon a creamy background, which softens the other tints beautifully. Both colors are woven in an arabesque design which simulates old tapestry, and the effect is especially good. Darker sets present almost as conglomerate an intermingling of colors as a cashmere shawl or an oriental rug, and are thick, but light in texture. They are all considered fast colors, but their laundering is something which one would instinctively postpone as long as the first freshness remained. A handsome luncheon set, consisting of a table-cloth and twelve napkins, that would please the seeker after nice but inexpensive goods, is of momie linen with a Kensington border inside a netted fringe.

Doylies. At their mention there comes to mind squares of silk and linen so woven as to appear all silk, bits of fine cambric with hem-stitching and drawn-work upon them, tiny morsels of linen overwrought with the fairy blossoms of the flax—indeed, no fancy of the brain is too original to be worked out upon these little ornaments, for that is what they are. Upon the embroidered ones the work is usually done at home, but any design admired will be developed by shop-keepers who supply them. Even the laundering of a set of table linen is now accomplished, if so ordered, before it is delivered to the purchaser.

In marking bedroom or table linen the initials, singly or interlaced of the lady of the house or the initial or emblem of her family are preferred if the articles are among the provisions of her family for her establishment in housekeeping; and sometimes this preference is maintained even when she has been for years a matron. Usually, however, linen purchased after marriage has the name or the initials, crest or monogram of the family upon it. The characters may be small or large, fashion only stipulating that they shall be perfectly wrought and not too conspicuously placed, and that upon white goods they shall be white. Sometimes the marking is so elaborate that its cost is nearly equal to the value of the linen.—Delineator.

ALWAYS KEEP THE UPPER HAND OF DISEASE.

Changes of temperature are apt to cause dangerous sickness; in the full-blooded apoplexy is to be feared. When you have a pain in the head, feel dizzy, feverish, rheumatic or sick at the stomach take at once three to ten of BRANDRETH'S PILLS. Such slight affections are only the harbingers of disease or sudden prostration, and the thing to do is to master the trouble at once. Never let a little sickness get the better of you. Drive it out of doors immediately. Let there be no compromise, always have with you a box of BRANDRETH'S PILLS, and you are prepared to fight the worst form of sickness in its incipiency.

Some thrifty dairymen has found out how to water butter as well as milk. He puts gelatin in it, and gelatin absorbs ten times its weight of water, while the water thus taken up does not impair the solidity of the butter.

THE EFFECTS OF MENTAL EXHAUSTION.

Many diseases, especially those of the nervous system, are the products of daily renewed mental exhaustion. Business avocations often involve an amount of mental wear and tear very prejudicial to physical health, and the professions, if arduously pursued, are no less destructive to brain and nerve tissue. It is one of the most important attributes of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, that it compensates for this undue loss of tissue, and that it imparts new energy to the brain and nerves. The rapidity with which it renews weakened mental energy and physical vitality is remarkable, and shows that its invigorating properties are of the highest order. Besides increasing vital stamina, and counteracting the effects of mental exhaustion, this potential medicine cures and prevents fever and ague, rheumatism, chronic dyspepsia and constipation, kidney and uterine weakness and other complaints. Physicians also commend it as a medicated stimulant and remedy.

IT IS A FACT

well established that consumption if attended to in its first stages, can be cured. There is, however, no true and rational way to cure this disease, which is really scrofulous ulceration of the lungs, except through purifying the blood. Keep the liver in perfect order and pure blood will be the result. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," a purely vegetable compound does all this and more; while it purifies the blood it also builds up the system, strengthening it against future attacks of disease. Reduced to a Skeleton by disease, and Restored to Health with Dr. Pardee's Remedy.

Wilson, Niagara Co., N. Y.

GENTLEMEN:—In April, 1883, I was prostrated by a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism and was confined to my bed four months. I was attended by the best medical skill, but rapidly grew worse until I was reduced to a mere skeleton.

The disease had gone to my lungs and to the region of my heart and I was finally given up by the physicians, who said I could live but a few hours at most and that all they could do was to make me as easy as possible by killing the pain by frequent injections of morphine. I was finally advised by a friend to take Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy. Upon being asked as to giving it to me, the physician said "I have no faith in patent medicines, but give it to him; it will not hurt him."

I was then so near dead that my limbs were cold below the knees, and a numb sensation began to creep over my body, and I suffered with great pain in my chest and about my heart. After I had taken the first few doses I experienced more pain than before, for it seemed to drive the pain from the vital parts toward the extremities. I continued to take it according to directions. Four days after the physicion who gave me up called to see me, and said I was much better. In about four weeks I could sit up; I then gained very fast and became as well as ever. CHAS. O. BARNUM.

LIVER, BLOOD AND LUNG DISEASES.

LIVER DISEASE AND HEART TROUBLE.
Mrs. MARY A. MCCLURE, Columbus, Kans., writes: "I addressed you in November, 1881, in regard to my health, being afflicted with liver disease, heart trouble, and female weakness. I was advised to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, Favorite Prescription and Pellets. I used one bottle of the 'Prescription,' five of the 'Discovery,' and four of the 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets.' My health began to improve under the use of your medicine, and my strength came back. My difficulties have all disappeared. I can work hard all day, or walk four or five miles a day, and stand it well; and when I began using the medicine I could scarcely walk across the room, most of the time, and I did not think I could ever feel well again. I have a little baby girl eight months old. Although she is a little delicate in size and appearance, she is healthy. I give your remedies all the credit for curing me, as I took no other treatment after beginning their use. I am very grateful for your kindness, and thank God and thank you that I am as well as I am after years of suffering."

LIVER DISEASE.
Mrs. I. V. WEBBER, of Yorkshire, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., writes: "I wish to say a few words in praise of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets.' For five years previous to taking them I was a great sufferer; I had a severe pain in my right side continually; was unable to do my own work. I am happy to say I am now well and strong, thanks to your medicines."

Chronic Diarrhea Cured.—D. LAZARRE, Esq., 275 and 277 Decatur Street, New Orleans, La., writes: "I used three bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and it has cured me of chronic diarrhea. My bowels are now regular."

GENERAL DEBILITY.
Mrs. PARMELIA BRUNDAGE, of 161 Lock Street, Lockport, N. Y., writes: "I was troubled with chills, nervous and general debility, with frequent sore throat, and my mouth was badly cankered. My liver was inactive, and I suffered much from dyspepsia. I am pleased to say that your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets' have cured me of all these ailments and I cannot say enough in their praise. I must also say a word in reference to your 'Favorite Prescription,' as it has proven itself a most excellent medicine for weak females. It has been used in my family with excellent results."

Dyspepsia.—JAMES L. COLBY, Esq., of Yucatan, Houston Co., Minn., writes: "I was troubled with indigestion, and would eat heartily and grow poor at the same time. I experienced heartburn, sour stomach, and many other disagreeable symptoms common to that disorder. I commenced taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets,' and I am now entirely free from the dyspepsia, and can, in fact, healthier than I have been for five years. I weigh one hundred and seventy-one and one-half pounds, and have done as much work the past summer as I have ever done in the same length of time in my life. I never took a medicine that seemed to tone up the muscles and invigorate the whole system equal to your 'Discovery' and 'Pellets.'"

INVIGORATES THE SYSTEM.

Dyspepsia.—THERESA A. CASS, of Springfield, Mo., writes: "I was troubled one year with liver complaint, dyspepsia, and sleeplessness, but your 'Golden Medical Discovery' cured me."

Chills and Fever.—Rev. H. E. MOSLEY, Monbmorenci, S. C., writes: "Last August I thought I would die with chills and fever. I took your 'Discovery' and it stopped them in a very short time."

"THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse the blood, which is the fountain of health, by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, and bodily health and vigor will be established.

Golden Medical Discovery cures all humors, from the common pimple, blotch, or eruption, to the worst Scrofula, or blood-poison. Especially has it proven its efficacy in curing Salt-rheum or Tetter, Fever-sores, Hip-joint Disease, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Enlarged Glands, and Eating Ulcers.

INDIGESTION BOILS, BLOTCHES.
Rev. F. ASBURY HOWELL, Pastor of the M. E. Church, of Silverton, N. J., says: "I was afflicted with catarrh and indigestion. Boils and blotches began to arise on the surface of the skin, and I experienced a tired feeling and dullness. I began the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery as directed by him for such complaints, and in one week's time I began to feel like a new man, and am now sound and well. The 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets' are the best remedy for bilious or sick headache, or tightness about the chest, and bad taste in the mouth, that I have ever used. My wife could not walk across the floor when she began to take your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' Now she can walk quite a little ways, and do some light work."

HIP-JOINT DISEASE.
Mrs. IDA M. STRONG, of Ainsworth, Ind., writes: "My little boy had been troubled with hip-joint disease for two years. When he commenced the use of your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pellets,' he was confined to his bed, and could not be moved without suffering great pain. But now, thanks to your 'Discovery,' he is able to be up all the time, and can walk with the help of crutches. He does not suffer any pain, and can eat and sleep as well as any one. It has only been three months since he commenced using your medicine. I cannot find words with which to express my gratitude for the benefit he has received through you."

A TERRIBLE AFFLICTION.
Skin Disease.—The "Democrat and News," of Cambridge, Maryland, says: "Mrs. ELIZA ANN POOLE, wife of Leonard Poole, of Williamsburg, Dorchester Co., Md., has been cured of a bad case of Eczema by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. The disease appeared first in her feet, extended to the knees, covering the whole of the lower limbs from feet to knees, then attacked the elbows and became so severe as to prostrate her. After being treated by several physicians for a year or two she commenced the use of the medicine named above. She soon began to mend and is now well and hearty. Mrs. Poole thinks the medicine has saved her life and prolonged her days."

CONSUMPTION, WEAK LUNGS, SPITTING OF BLOOD.

GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY cures Consumption (which is Scrofula of the Lungs), by its wonderful blood-purifying, invigorating and nutritive properties. For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, Asthma, and kindred affections, it is a sovereign remedy. While it promptly cures the severest Coughs it strengthens the system and purifies the blood.

Consumption.—Mrs. EDWARD NEWTON, of Harrowsmith, Ont., writes: "You will ever be praised by me for the remarkable cure in my case. I was so reduced that my friends had all given me up, and I had also been given up by two doctors. I then went to the best doctor in these parts. He told me that medicine was only a punishment in my case, and would not undertake to treat me. He said I might try Cod liver oil if I liked, as that was the only thing that could possibly have any curative power over consumption so far advanced. I tried the Cod liver oil as a last treatment, but I was so weak I could not keep it on my stomach. My husband, not feeling satisfied to give me up yet, though he had bought for me everything he saw advertised for my complaint, procured a quantity of your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I took only four bottles, and, to the surprise of everybody, am to-day doing my own work, and am entirely free from that terrible cough which harrassed me night and day. I have been afflicted with rheumatism for a number of years, and now feel so much better that I believe, with a continuation of your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' I will be restored to perfect health. I would say to those who are falling a prey to that terrible disease consumption, do not do as I did, take everything else first; but take the 'Golden Medical Discovery' in the early stages of the disease, and thereby save a great deal of suffering and be restored to health at once. Any person who is still in doubt, need but write me, inclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply, when the foregoing statement will be fully substantiated by me."

GIVEN UP TO DIE.

Ulcer Cured.—ISAAC E. DOWNS, Esq., of Spring Valley, Rockland Co., N. Y. (P. O. Box 28), writes: "The 'Golden Medical Discovery' has cured my daughter of a very bad ulcer located on the thigh. After trying almost everything without success, we procured three bottles of your 'Discovery,' which healed it up perfectly." Mr. Downs continues:

Consumption and Heart Disease.—"I also wish to thank you for the remarkable cure you have effected in my case. For three years I had suffered from that terrible disease, consumption, and heart disease. Before consulting you I had wasted away to a skeleton; could not sleep nor rest, and many times wished to die to be out of my misery. I then consulted you, and you told me you had hopes of curing me, but it would take time. I took five months' treatment in all. The first two months I was almost discouraged; could not perceive any favorable symptoms, but the third month I began to pick up in flesh and strength. I cannot now recite how, step by step, the signs and realities of returning health gradually but surely developed themselves. To-day I tip the scales at one hundred and sixty, and am well and strong."

CRIME BY SUGGESTION.

Helplessness of Hysterical Persons When in an Hypnotic Condition.

At the last session of the French Academy of Medicine a paper was read by Dr. Mesnet, which was, to say the least, suggestive. It referred to the possibility of influencing the actions of nervous, hysterical patients when in an hypnotic condition, and compelling them to violate the moral law—not only without their consent but in spite of their resistance, and, of course, without their knowledge. Were the statements not made on the highest scientific authority they would be at once rejected as incredible. The theories they suggest in the way of the successful accomplishment of secret crimes are simply startling.

Dr. Mesnet narrates the case of a young man of nineteen who was surprised and arrested at the moment he was quickly carrying away from before a furniture store chairs, tables and a wardrobe with which to furnish his rooms across the way. The youth was taken to the Hotel de Dieu (the well-known hospital) and placed under surveillance by the doctor. He had, it was found, nervous "antecedents," his mother being subject to hysterics. He himself is a somnambulist and talks in his sleep. At times he would rise, sweep the room, arrange the furniture, and on awakening would have no remembrance of his actions. Recently sleep overcame him while thus occupied. Dr. Mesnet had no difficulty in "hypotizing" him. He then waited, and availed himself of the first opportunity to order him to do some illegal act during his slumbers.

One day, when I called, says the physician, he fixed his eyes on me and dropped asleep. He followed me everywhere and heard only my voice. I took him to Dr. Tillaux, and fixed my eyes on my worthy confrere. The patient did the same. From that moment I was blotted out of his mind, and he became identified with his new possessor, whose motions he repeated with scrupulous fidelity. I passed my hands between the eyes of Tillaux and my own, and he again came under my control. I decided to order him to do something after his awakening.

"To-morrow morning at nine o'clock you are to come to my office. Monsieur X., whom you know, will be there. You will take his watch chain from him."

His face showed very plainly that he did not fancy the commission. I repeated the order in an imperative tone.

"Well!" he at last replied.

The next day, during my visit, I conversed with him. He replied with great vivacity. Then I went toward my office. He followed me. In a few moments he began to look intently at the watch chain visible under the half-opened paletot of X., who was on my right, the patient being on my left. Meantime his pupils dilated, he blushed and grew pale by turns, while his whole appearance attested great mental suffering. He slowly stepped forward, reached towards the chain but did not touch it; then he suddenly rushed forward, withdrew the key from the vest button, took out both watch and chain, ran out of the room and down stairs as fast as his legs would carry him. At the foot of the stair-case a policeman barred his passage.

"Where did you come from?"

"I don't know."

I feel in his right hand pocket and produce the watch and chain. He burst into tears and threw himself at my feet, exclaiming:

"I am not a thief. I swear I am not."

Then he stood up and wanted to beat his brains out against the wall. Finally he had a cataleptic fit. The patient on being questioned after he awoke, hearing that he was accused of theft, indignantly protested, swore that he knew nothing of the acts with which he was charged, and at last became so excited that it took a dozen persons to hold him. The means used to again bring him to himself—breathing on his face and eyes and the use of cold water—were for a long time tried in vain, the hypnotic state arising in this latter case not from any exterior act, but from his own emotion—Paris Cor. N. Y. Graphic.

NOODLES FOR SOUP.

The Proper Way of Preparing, Rolling and Cutting the Paste.

The German noodles are very easily made and much better than they can be bought. Beat one egg with a pinch of salt, stir into it as much flour, well dried, as will make a stiff, elastic paste: it must be very stiff but not hard. Roll this out as thin as paper on a board, then lay a clean double cloth on the board and the paste upon it. Now roll again and when it is thin as you can make it leave it ten minutes to dry. Cut the sheet in half, and roll up one portion closely, then with a sharp knife cut this roll through at intervals of the third of an inch. It will now form strips like tape, which must be tossed with a fork to separate them. These may be used fresh or dried in a very cool oven and kept in bottles.

A novel kind of noodle may be made from the same paste. Fold the half you were directed to leave, roll it slightly and then out of the double paste cut little disks, either with a top of a thimble, or a small cylinder not larger than a dime. Have some smoking hot fat in a small saucepan and drop these disks into it. They will immediately swell into balls and should only be allowed to color very slightly. Take them up with a skimmer and drain them on paper. These will keep a week and are ready to add to the soup at any time.—Catherine Owen, in Detroit Tribune.

ABUSING WASHINGTON.

Some Scandalous Charges Made Against the Father of His Country.

General Washington was probably as much abused as any President who has ever acted as the Chief Executive of the United States. At one time he said that he had been abused worse than a common pickpocket, and he was charged with all sorts of crimes during his administration. The Philadelphia Aurora was, perhaps, the most bitter. When Washington left the Presidency it had a jubilant article over the close of his term, in which it said:

"If ever there was a period of rejoicing this is the moment. Every heart in unison with the freedom and happiness of the people ought to beat high with exultation that the name of Washington this day ceased to give a currency to political iniquity and to legalized corruption. A new era is now opening upon us—an era which promises much to the people; for public measures must now stand upon their own merits, and nefarious projects can no longer be supported by a name. It is a subject of the greatest astonishment that a single individual should have carried his designs against the public liberty so far as to have put in jeopardy its very existence. Such, however, are the facts, and with these staring us in the face this day ought to be a jubilee in the United States."

During a part of his Presidency Washington was called the step-father of his country, and among the paragraphs written about him was one which said: "That to talk of the wisdom of the great commander (Washington) and the great philosopher (Franklin) was to talk nonsense, for Washington was a fool from nature and Franklin was a fool from age."

In 1795 "A Calm Observer" in the New York Journal accused Washington of being a thief. He stated that he had overdrawn his accounts and that he owed the treasury $1,037. Another writer accused Washington of hypocrisy and declared that he wanted to be a King. A third criticised his carriage and his aristocracy, and, in fact, all the opposition newspapers denounced him in unmeasured terms. Congress went against him during his second term and refused to celebrate his birthday, though they had been accustomed to do so, and when he refused to run for a third term they charged that he did so because he feared that he could not be elected.

It will be surprising to the people to-day to know that Washington was once charged with murder. It was during one of his Presidential campaigns. The Philadelphia Aurora made the charge. It stated that Washington had, during one of the battles of his early life, shot an officer who was bearing a flag of truce, and that in the papers relating to the affair he had acknowledged the act of assassination. Peter Porcupine takes up the charge in his letters and proves it to be false. The fact, however, stands that the charge was made.

Speaking of Washington, I see that some of the goody-good newspapers of the country are very indignant at the statement in Quackenbos' history that Washington at one time ate peas with a knife. I do not doubt but the statement is true. The whole literary United States at the time of Washington, however, seemed to be a mutual admiration society, and there is little unfavorable gossip about the White House dinners. I found the other day, however, Maclay's diary, giving his experiences during his term as a Senator of the United States when Washington was first President. Maclay dined with Washington a number of times, and scattered through his diary are little bits of gossip about these dinners. At two of them he describes Washington as amusing himself during all the dinner by playing the devil's tattoo upon the table with his fork. He says, speaking of one of these dinners: "The President kept a fork in his hand when the cloth was taken away, I thought for the purpose of picking nuts. He ate no nuts, but played with the fork, striking on the edge of the table with it."—Cor. Cleveland Leader.

SUPERSTITIOUS SIGNS.

Popular Fallacies Which Probably Originated Hundreds of Years Ago.

If, on going out of the house, you forget something, you must under no circumstances turn back if you can possibly avoid it; if you do, you must, at any rate, sit down a moment before going out again.

If the first person you meet is an old woman, it is a sign of coming misfortune; while, on the contrary, a funeral procession denotes good fortune.

Pigs to your left bring good luck, to your right the opposite; to avert which, grasp something made of steel and the spell will be broken.

If, on setting out on a journey, you meet a sow with pigs your enterprise will be sure to be successful.

To meet two magpies portends marriage; three, a successful journey; four, unexpected good news.

To see one magpie and then more is unlucky; to kill one of these birds is irretrievable misfortune. It is also unlucky to kill a swallow.

If your left hand itches you will take in money; if the right, you will pay it out.

A ringing in the right ear means that some one is speaking well of you; in the left, you may be sure that evil tongues are busy with you.

If your right eye itches, you will see some beautiful sight; if the left, you will have cause to shed tears.

If your nose itches, you will hear some news or—will fall into the mire.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE SAHARA DESERT.

Our voyage will soon be over now, for we are just passing the outermost skirt of that mighty Sahara desert which I entered from the other side eight years ago in company with a group of adventurous French officers. This will probably be our last glimpse of Africa for the present, and another day ought to bring us in sight of Grand Canary, where we shall go ashore for a holiday upon one of the most beautiful islands in the Atlantic, in which we may enjoy all the richness and splendor of the tropics without their destroying heat and deadly malaria.

The coast which we are now skirting is the same where the Spaniards proposed to annex sixty miles of seaboard a few years ago. In this wise undertaking they have certainly little opposition to fear, for no man in his senses would be likely to dispute with them the possession of these barren rocks and lifeless sands, which extend their dreary length along the eastern horizon as far as the eye can reach. What the interior of this dismal region is like may be gathered from the simple, straightforward narrative of a man of whom America may be justly proud—that stout hearted New England Captain who was one of the few men that survived the fearful ordeal of slavery among savages as greedy and ferocious as the vultures who share with them the solitudes of this accursed desert. Wrecked a little to the north of the perilous cape, he was instantly pounced upon by the fierce Arabs that haunt it, plundered, stripped and dragged away into the depths of the wilderness with the remnant of his ill-fated crew. This is how he describes his journey: "The flints upon which we trod were sharp as knives, laying open our bare feet at every step, so that the blood dripped from our heels as we struggled on. Meanwhile the Arabs kept goading us forward by dealing us heavy blows with the shafts of their spears or pricking us with their points. The burning sand that entered our wounds caused us intolerable agony, and the sun was now beating down upon us so fiercely that our exposed skins peeled off in long strips as if scalded with boiling water. At length, driven to desperation, I began to look about for a large stone, intending to dash out my brains with it, and so to end my sufferings. But not finding one I determined to bear up and not lose hope while life remained to me."

This same coast has witnessed another tragedy of European renown, the mere mention of which, after the lapse of nearly half a century, suffices to thrill with horror all who have ever heard of it. At the end of one of the rooms in the great picture gallery of the Louvre, in a dim and fitful light that makes its ghastly details doubly terrific, hangs an enormous picture representing a wave-tossed raft strewn with the haggard, wasted forms of a shipwrecked crew. Some fastening blood-stained bandages around their shrunken limbs. Others are lying prostrate, with their livid features and rayless eyeballs turned blindly upward to the merciless splendor of the bright, cloudless, cruel sky. Others still are straining despairingly over a sailless ocean the sunken eyes whose fixed stare of dumb and stony horror haunted me for many a day after I first saw it. There is no need for any one to ask what that picture means. One glance suffices to tell the most careless observer that it can represent nothing else than the historical raft upon which the doomed survivors of the Medusa lingered out the last days of that long agony whose sickening details are too well known to need repetition.—David Ker, in N. Y. Times.

On the "Fast" Train.

"In what way?"

"You told me when I got on that this was a fast train. I never traveled so slow in my life."

"I assure you that what I told you was correct. This is one of the fastest trains on the road."

"Well, come to think of it, I guess you're right. You've no objection to my going back to the rear platform, have you?"

"No, sir. But what do you want out there?"

—A witness who was called to prove the correctness of a doctor's bill, was asked if the doctor did not make several unnecessary visits—did not continue his professional calls after the patient was entirely out of danger. BILL NYE CORRECTS AN ERROR.

How a Correspondent Located Him in the Wrong Mansion.

If you will excuse me for introducing a purely personal matter, I would like to make an explanation at this time which concerns me, of course, more than any one else, and yet it ought to be made in the interests of general justice also. I refer to a recent article published in a western paper and handsomely illustrated, in which, among others, I find a picture of my residence.

The description which accompanies the cut, among other things, goes on to state as follows: "The structure is elaborate, massive and beautiful. It consists of three stories, basement and attic, and covers a large area on the ground. It contains an elevator, electric bells, steam heating arrangements, baths, hot and cold, in every room, electric lights, laundry, fire escapes, etc. The grounds consist of at least five acres, overlooking the river for several miles up and down, with fine boating and a private fish pond of two acres in extent, containing every known variety of game fish. The grounds are finely laid out in handsome drives and walks, and when finished the establishment will be one of the most complete and beautiful in the northwest."

No one realizes more fully than I the great power of the press for good or evil. Rightly used the newspaper can make or unmake men, and wrongly used it can be even more sinister. I might say, knowing this as I do, I want to be placed right before the people. The above is not a correct description of my house, for several reasons. In the first place, it is larger and more robust in appearance, and in the second place it has not the same tout ensemble as my residence. My house is less obtrusive and less arrogant in its demeanor than the one described and it has no elevator in it.

My house is not the kind that seems to crave an elevator. An elevator in my house would lose money. There is no popular clamor for one, and if I were to put one in I would have to abolish the dining room. It would also interfere with the parlor.

I have learned recently that the correspondent who came here to write up this matter visited the town while I was in the south, and as he could not find me he was at the mercy of strangers. A young man who lives here and who is just in the heyday of life gleefully consented to show the correspondent my new residence not yet completed. So they went over and examined the new Oliver Wendell Holmes hospital, which will be completed in June, and which is of course a handsome structure, but quiet different from my house in many particulars.

For instance, my residence is of a different school of architecture, being rather on the Scandinavian order, while the foregoing has a tendency toward the Ironic. The hospital belongs to a very recent school, as I may say, while my residence, in its architectural methods and conception, goes back to the time of the mound builders, a time when a Gothic hole in the ground was considered the magnum bonum and the scrumptuous thing in art. If the reader will go around behind the above building and notice it carefully on the east side, he will not discover a dried coon skin nailed to the rear breadths of the woodshed. That alone ought to convince an observing man that the house is not mine. The coon skin regardant will always be found emblazoned on my arms, together with a blue Goddess of Liberty and my name in green India ink.

The front part of my house runs back to the time of Polypus the First, while the L runs back as far as the cistern.

In closing, let me say that I am not finding fault with any one because the above error has crept into the public prints, for it is really a pardonable error, after all. Neither do I wish to be considered as striving to eliminate my name from the columns of the press, for no one could be more tickled than I am over a friendly notice of my arrival in town or a timely reference to my courteous bearing and youthful appearance, but I want to see the Oliver Wendell Holmes hospital succeed, and so I come out in this way over my own signature and admit that the building does not belong to me, and that, so far as I am concerned, the man who files a lien on it will simply fritter away his time.—Bill Nye in New York World.

ABOUT FALSE HAIR.

A Dealer Tells Where It Comes From, and How It is Obtained.

"Nearly all the false hair that is sold in this country," said a dealer, recently, "is brought from France and Germany. It is obtained in those countries from the peasant girls. The Berlin and Paris merchants send their agents out through the country districts, and, whenever one of these agents meets a lass with a fine crop of hair, he immediately begins to bargain with her. As a rule the peasants know so little of the world, and are so utterly ignorant of the value of things, that they generally sell their hair at the most ridiculously low prices. It is nothing uncommon to see a French peasant girl dispose of the most magnificent suit of hair, a suit that would sell for seventy-five dollars, for a worthless ear-ring or a string of bright-looking beads. If these merchants meet a girl on the road whose hair attracts them, they never give the poor girl time to think, or opportunity to go home and consult her parents, but the moment she says 'yes,' out come their shears and off goes her magnificent hair, and the poor child's only return is a worthless trinket. It seems sad, but such is life—at least hair-merchant life. After the hair has been all collected and brought into Paris and Berlin, it is then put through a cleaning process and assorted and arranged. On all hair as it comes from the head, there is, no matter how clean a person tries to keep her or himself, more or less dandruff. The hair is passed through a sort of wire net or chain, the wires of which are so close together that the hairs themselves can scarcely pass through. You would think this would cut the hair, but it does not. It only gets the dirt off, and it does so most effectually. After the hair is thus thoroughly cleaned, it is assorted in proper colors, qualities and lengths. Then the black hair is again run over and three more piles are made of it—the long black hairs, the medium and the short. The light hair is similarly assorted. Then the dealers mix the black and light hairs together and make from them different shades. By mixing a jet black, for instance, with a color two shades lighter than jet black you get a color exactly one shade lighter, and this is the rule all through the different combinations of hair colors. A color mixed with another color that is two shades lighter than itself will produce a color one shade lighter, and a shade that appears to be perfectly natural. If the hair is mixed with a color that is more than two shades it will produce a streaky combination, which is, of course, to be avoided; but when the mixing is properly done not even an expert can tell the difference between the real color and the color that is the result of this skillful manipulation. The French are the most expert hair-mixers in the world, and many a blonde or brown suit of hair that looks so perfectly natural is, in reality, the product of two different heads, and all the result of the ingenious French hair-mixers. What does a head of hair cost? Well, of course, there is in hair, as in everything else, an immense variety of kinds, and consequently an immense variety of prices. Heads of hair can be bought as low as fifteen dollars, and there are many that bring seventy-five dollars. For this latter price I should say that the very best suit of hair that can be found in Boston can be purchased. It does not cost a woman, or, I should probably say in order to keep in the fashion, a Mrs. Lady, as much to purchase her hair now as it did three or four years ago. The Mrs. Ladies do not wear near so much hair now as they did then, as any one, even a Mr. Gentleman, can see by glancing at one of their heads. Consequently, while it formerly cost a fashionable female from one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars to perfectly adorn her head, supposing, of course, that she had no hair at all to start with, the same female can now buy the very best head gear in Boston at from fifty to seventy-five dollars. Is there much false hair worn in Boston? Oh, an immense deal of it. I indulge in no exaggeration when I say that there are not five women in one hundred who do not wear some false hair."—Boston Herald.

Smarter Than He Looked.

The smart young clerk who tried to raise a laugh at the expense of a "country cousin," illustrated the truth of the old aphorism in regard to looks being very deceptive. He received his lesson.

"See that country cousin over there by the stove?" inquired a Harlem clerk of another, as a rural-appearing customer entered and glanced curiously about the store.

"Yes, I see him. What of it?"

"Watch me take him down. Say, mister," the cute clerk continued, addresssing the supposed greenhorn, "we don't keep whisky."

"Wall, sonny, all I've got ter say is that It'd save you a pile of trav'l if yer did," was the prompt reply.—Youth's Companion.

—The negro schools and colleges in Atlanta, says the Constitution of that city, are much more costly and comfortable than the schools for the whites. It is true that much, perhaps the most, of the money invested in these edifices came from the North, but the fact that Atlanta has been selected as the site and center of them speaks well for the enterprise and local pride of the leading negroes of Atlanta. Their educational institutions are not only very imposing structures, but they are fully equipped and abundantly endowed, and to all outward appearances are doing a good work.

THE LAST MAN.

Sad Predicament of the Unlucky Wight Who Ends a Long Procession.

There is one individual that we have always felt great sympathy for, and that is the last man in the procession. He doesn't want to be the last man, of course, but implacable fate puts him there and there he seems to stay. There's no way of getting out of it.

Did you ever wait long enough to see the last man in a great street parade? Of course there must be a last man in a procession as there is a head man to lead it. He is that thrice unfortunate individual who closes up the rear. He grows tired of waiting long before the procession gets under way, and has half a mind to break ranks and go home. The crowds press on him and little boys jeer him. Then, as the long procession moves down the street, he is conscious all the time that every body will be weary of the show by the time he comes laboriously bringing up the rear, and no matter how well he may march no one is going to pay any attention to him. His only utility seems to be to keep the express wagons from crowding on to the fellows preceding him.

The rear of a big procession always straggles more or less, and it becomes necessary for those composing it to break into a sharp run frequently in order to avoid getting left altogether. Then it is that the last man has a distressing time of it. Dogs chase him and bark at his heels. He is cut off by a wagon at a cross street, which whips in and prevents his joining the main body, and if he isn't nimble enough to jump over the wagon he is liable to get mixed up with all sorts of vehicles and cursed by drivers individually and collectively. Sometimes he is compelled to make a long detour of side and parallel streets in order to catch up with the procession again.

The populace are not favorably disposed to the last man, somehow. There is a disposition to hoot at him, and mischievous fellows have been known to throw obstacles in his way to trip him up. We have seen him trip on a hoop, stumble over a wheelbarrow, roll over a barrel and be knocked down by an express wagon going half a block. You can't help admiring the persistency of the man and his evident determination to bring up the rear at whatever personal sacrifice. It is a thankless operation, though.—Boston Globe.

The Latest Society Kink.

"So Miss Blank is married?" he inquired.

"Yes."

"I heard that her father gave her a check for ten thousand dollars."

"Yes, he did."

"Was it good for any thing."

"Well, that's the point that puzzles every body who was there. They were all crowding around to see if it was certified, when she held it aloft and exclaimed: "Dear father, but these diamonds are enough!" She touched it to the gas, and away it went. I think it's a new kink, and one intended to save the old man."—Detroit Free Press.

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER.

The Good Woman Tells How Her Husband Bore the Pains of Toothache.

I was telling you awhile ago of Mr. Bowser's impatience and annoyance when he happened to find me in bed for a couple of hours with sick headache, and how he went to pieces himself the moment any thing ailed him. About a month ago I woke up one morning with the toothache. It had been annoying me for an hour before Mr. Bowser caught on. Then he said:

"Toothache, eh? Well, I don't pity you a bit. This comes from cracking walnuts in your teeth and chewing so much of that everlasting gum."

"I never cracked a walnut, and I don't chew gum once a year."

"Well, it's some carelessness of yours, rest assured of that, and you must suffer for it."

He went off whistling and singing and I went to bed to suffer.

That tooth ached for three days and three nights in spite of all remedies. During the day Mr. Bowser would remark:

"Aches yet, does it? I believe you are pretending a great deal, so as to get my sympathy. If you'd get up and go around and throw off the idea that your tooth ached the pain would all go away. Four-fifths of the human aches come from imagination."

"But it does ache so bad."

"That is, you imagine it does. I could go to bed and imagine my leg was off, and I have no doubt that I should suffer awful pains. Well, I can't do any thing for you. If you will let your imagination run away with your sense I can't help it."

The ache hung on so long that I finally went to the dentist and had the tooth pulled. This was unbeknown to Mr. Bowser, and when he came home that evening and found me singing to the baby he laughed long and loud and added:

"Didn't I tell you so! No doubt you had a little bit of toothache to start with—just a little bit—and imagination did the rest. If I had gone to work and called you my poor, dear, stricken, suffering darling you'd have had every tooth jumping out of you head. It's mighty lucky for you that you married a man with something besides sawdust under his scalp."

My revenge came sooner than could have been anticipated. It wasn't two weeks before Mr. Bowser awoke me one night at midnight by exclaiming:

"Mrs. Bowser, are you dead, or have you become stone-deaf?"

"What is it, dear, burglars or fire?"

"Burglars or fire be hanged! I've been suffering with the toothache for the last three hours, and you've laid there and snored away as if you didn't care a cent whether I lived or died!"

"But what can I do? This is the result of some carelessness of yours. Have you cracked any walnuts in your teeth lately?"

He sat up in bed and held his jaw and glared at me so fiercely that I was quite alarmed and went for the medicine-case. I gave him some peppermint essence on cotton; then some oil of cloves on a rag; then some camphor on the end of a tooth-pick. It was no use.

"I don't believe I shall live to see daylight!" he moaned as he fell out of bed and began to dress.

"Oh, yes, you will. Are you sure your tooth aches?"

He looked around after his revolver, but I had slipped it under the bureau.

"I had it, you know, or thought I had, but I guess it was all imagination. Mr. Bowser, just imagine you haven't a tooth in your head."

"And you just imagine that you are an old buzzard waiting to pick my bones!" he roared as he danced around.

We tied a bag of hot ashes on his face, and we put on mustard, pain-killer and almost every thing else in the house, and none of us slept another wink. When morning came the ache was no better, and I coldly observed:

"Well, of course you don't want to keep the house upset any longer. You'd better go down and have it pulled."

"W-what!"

"Just run down and have the dentist draw it out. It will hurt awfully, of course, but you are a man and can stand it!"

"I'll die first!"

"Oh, well, if you will permit your imagination to make you believe that you have toothache don't blame me."

I felt awfully sorry for him, for he suffered dreadfully for the next two days. Then he suddenly decided to have the tooth pulled, and asked me in a tone he tried to make careless:

"Mrs. Bowser, don't you want to go down to the dentist's with me?"

"Why, does your tooth still ache?"

"Still ache! Great Scotts, but it has never let up for an instant!"

"I am sorry you were so careless. Men never know how to take care of their health. Can't be imagination, can it?"

He gave me a look of boiler-plated reproach, clapped on his hat and was off without another word. He returned in a couple of hours, and I knew from his general demeanor that he had been to the dentist, and that the aching molar had come home in his pocket.

"Well, are you better?" I queried.

"Better of what?"

"Why, the toothache, of course."

"Humph! Who's said any thing about my having the toothache? Mrs. Bowser, I don't want to believe that you drink, but your conduct for the last two or three weeks has been strange—very strange!"—Detroit Free Press.

SATURDAY, JULY 2 .....1887.

MARRIED.

LONG—McELROY—At Independence, June 30, 1887, by Rev. J. H. De La Matyr, George L. Long and Miss Ruth B. McElroy.

Everybody will decorate for the Fourth.

Simmons, charged with setting fire to the Hotel Del Monte, at Monterey, has been acquitted.

An effort is being made to have a mail route established from Darwin to Panamint. It is much needed.

George Courtright came in from Panamint to Lone Pine a few days ago. He is sick and will stay until his health is restored.

Joseph Kinnegan was killed at the Yellow Jacket mine, Virginia City, last Monday. He was caught by the cage and crushed.

Under a new contract Mr. T. C. Boland now carries the mail from Keeler to Darwin. Tim Madden is engineer, conductor and brakeman of the mustang mail train.

Joe Fernbach will have several kegs of Fredericksburg lager beer on the Fourth, enabling the thirty patriot to slake his thirst with the best the market affords; try it.

Darwin was painted in ruby colors one evening last week. The colors were laid on by Barnes, Boland and — well, the other artists appear to have forgotten their own names.

Quite a number of Northern people have signified their intention of coming on the regular Monday evening train to attend the ball, for which the best music has been engaged.

Mr. N. G. Fairman came in from Panamint last Tuesday. He attended to some business and started back Thursday. He says the new mill is well along toward completion.

Parents, send your children to the Sunday school and church. There can be no real civilization without religious instruction. It would be still better if you would take them to church.

Frank Densmore returned home a few days ago from the Bishop Creek Academy to pass the vacation. Frank is credited with being one of the most promising students of the Academy.

Free conveyances to and from depot to carry passengers desiring to attend the celebration at Independence. For rates on the excursion train going north Monday morning inquire at the railroad office.

H. Levy has put up a large wagon shed back of the Independence hotel for the convenience of patrons. Mr. Levy is always on the lookout to provide new comforts and conveniences for the public.

Mr. C. B. Rawson, at Black Rock, has been running five mowing machines on alfalfa during the week. Each machine will cut from twelve to fifteen tons each day. This is making hay pretty fast.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Collins and Miss Collins passed through Independence on Thursday morning on their way from Kern county to their new home at Warm Spring. A large team loaded with household hoods is on the way.

Fancy costumes for the parade were received by Bert. Rhine at the beginning of the week. Some of the costumes are really beautiful, and some, like the Irishman's stick, are "part'y wid ugliness," but all will be found amusing.

Mr. Muth-Rassmussen brought in a lot of first-class new honey on Monday. This honey is put up in one pound boxes, this being the most convenient form for table use. Orders left with the post-master will be promptly attended to.

A shipment of ore recently sent from Panamint to Reno returned 275 ounces silver per ton. The ore belonged to Mr. Lee. About the same time H. G. Chickering sent out a lot of ore from the same camp that returned over four hundred dollars per ton.

John Fiehman, of Keeler, was carrying goods into his store last Monday when he slipped and fell, spraining his left knee badly. Next day he came to town for treatment by Dr. Woodin, and was so far relieved that he was able to return on Wednesday.

Mr. A. N. Bell and family returned at the beginning of the week from an extended trip west of the mountains. Many old friends and relatives were visited and the time was full of pleasure. The young people enjoyed the trip in a special degree.

An experienced prospector from Virginia City is now in the Darwin country. He writes that several districts down that way where nothing is doing contains plenty of ore that only needs energy to get it out. He says that men who will work can make good wages chloriding, and there is plenty of room for a large number.

During the winter Mrs. Fernbach had a lot of seeds sent her by relatives in Iowa. Among them happened to be three kernels of Russian white oats. These were planted in the garden and each seed sprouted, producing a large number of stocks; some of the stocks are at least six feet high and all are heavily loaded with grain.

A very valuable book to all who are interested in stock raising has recently been issued from the government printing office at Washington. Through the courtesy of Congressman Markham a few volumes have been received for distribution free of charge, and can be had at the office of the INDEPENDENT.

More miners are wanted at Darwin. If men prefer to work independently there is plenty of opportunity. Many miners are now working their own or leased claims, "chloriding" as it is called, and all are doing well. There is no other camp on the Pacific Coast where so many good mining prospects are in sight. Darwin is but twenty-four miles from Keeler, on the C. & C. railroad.

In Serious Trouble.

Last Sunday night Constable Wilson, of Darwin, arrived at Independence with a prisoner in charge. Antone Hilario, a native of Portugal, has been engaged in charcoal burning about Darwin for the past ten or twelve years. Four years ago a fellow countryman named Frates went to Darwin; he was sick and poor, and partially demented. Hilario took Frates to his camp, cared for him till he got well and then put him to work. Recently Hilario prepared to return to Portugal; he sold all his camp equippage, settled up all his affairs and started on his journey. At Keeler he was overtaken by the Constable and arrested at the instance of Frates, charged with leaving the State with intention to defraud a creditor. Frates demanded payment far the entire four years at the rate of forty dollars per month, less $650 cash Hilario had paid him, together with clothing and other supplies. Hilario was taken back to Darwin and tried before Justice Hawley, without a jury. Judgment was given against him, and refusing to satisfy same he was committed for contempt of Court. A charge of perjury was preferred against him for swearing that he had not the means to satisfy the judgment, and on this charge another warrant was issued and served upon him. Hilario is now well advanced in years; he says he is willing to lie in jail if his family can have the benefit of his many years of toil and privation. His wife and children are in Portugal. Mr. Eddy, of Darwin, and others who have done business with Hilario for many years, speak highly of him as an honest man.

John W. P. Laird Esq. applied to the Superior Court for a writ of habeas corpus. He made an able argument in the case and the writ was sustained and Hilario set at liberty.

Important Election.

This day the question of the new irrigation district will be decided upon. When the measure was first proposed a good deal of opposition was offered, but every day since then the opposition has become less. As the new law was discussed and better understood its good features became apparent, till now there is hardly a man in the district who does not favor it. All now see clearly what has so often been urged in this paper, that the interests of every one will be promoted by the measure. Every one who owns land in the valley, whether in the line of the proposed canal or not will be benefited. Nothing else we could do will so speedily enhance the value of all kinds of property. No other undertaking will put so much money in circulation, nor so speedily bring what we so much desire, railroad opening to the south. Not a vote should be lost at this most important election, an election of more real importance to the people of Owens Valley than that of President of the United States.

Beautiful Ballroom.

In the beginning of the week communications received from many quarters made it evident that the crowd at Independence on the Fourth would be so great that no hall in the town would be near large enough to hold all who would want to attend the ball. When this was seen lumber was at once ordered by telegraph from Hawthorne and a large pavilion will be built for the occasion. The structure will be covered with canvas and will be brilliantly lighted. It will be decorated with fancy lanterns, flowers and other devices. This will make a large and beautiful ballroom, and the weather being warm will also be more comfortable than a close hall. A large orchestra of the best musicians in the county, led by Curt. W. Ober, will furnish music for the ball.

Nominations.

A meeting was held at Georges Creek to nominate officers for the proposed irrigation district. The following nominations were made: For Assessor, John Anton. For Collector S. D. Thurston and R. C. Spear were placed in nomination; Mr. Spear was nominated. For Treasurer W. S. Enos, J. D. Blair and N. Rhine were nominated; on the withdrawal of the others Mr. Rhine was chosen. For Directors C. B. Rawson was named for the First Division; J. S. Gorman and S. A. Densmore were nominated for the Second Division. The Third Division were not ready to report. The Fourth Division nominated Mr. Hunter. The Fifth Division was not ready to report, and the meeting adjourned. On Tuesday at a meeting held at Independence H. L. Clark was chosen for the Third District by a unanimous vote. At a meeting held at Lone Pine A. C. Harvey and G. M. Palmer were chosen.

Defiance Mine

The Defiance mine is now in a condition to reward Mr. Reddy for the years of labor and large sums he has expended in developing it. Large ore bodies are opened and the ore can be taken out easily. Two steam hoisting engines were put in place a short time ago. Within a few days an opening was made from a new drift into the main shaft, and through this the lower workings of the shaft will be aired and ore will be hoisted. In the main ledge cavities are found that, so miners say, are always sure evidences of large and rich ore bodies. Mr. Reddy is employing all the good miners he can get to work in the mine. The Defiance is about one mile from Darwin and several of the miners board in town

Wanted—1,000 persons to attend the Fourth of July at Independence, the grandest ever held in the county. Everything new and original.

Many inquiries continue to be made as to the possibility of finding land for location in Owens Valley. At the rate locations are being made, in a very short time no more government land will remain. Good land partially improved, and with perfect title, can be bought for ten dollars per acre, but this will very soon increase. Many who are making these inquiries are land owners in other parts of the State.

George M. Gill, Esq., and family are visiting with his mother, Mrs. S. A. Densmore, at Camp Independence. Mr. Gill has been in ill health for some time and has returned to Inyo with the hope of gaining strength. His malady is rheumatic gout caused by malaria lurking in his system. Emminent San Francisco physicians recommended Inyo county to him as the best place to which he could possibly go with hope of recovery.

Mr. Lee, a well known prospector, arrived at Darwin last Saturday from Panamint. He brought large samples of valuable ores from recently discovered ledges. Mr. Lee says the Panamint country is full of good ore, but in the uncertainty of getting the ore speedily to market miners are not encouraged to work with vigor. A railroad has been much talked of lately that would reach the Panamint country and pass thence to Los Angeles. If this road should be built a mining country will be opened up that would yield enormous returns.

School District Needed.

A new school district is very much needed at Black Rock. It is claimed that at least sixteen children of school age are in that vicinity, and the nearest school is at Camp Independence, ten miles distant. The law only requires fifteen children of a school age for a new district, and the children must live at least two miles distant from any existing school house. Both of the conditions are more than complied with in the proposed district. A petition for the formation of the district should be presented to the Superintendent in order that he may approve it and bring it before the Supervisors for final action at the next meeting of the Board. This the law requires. If the conditions are complied with a school house could be built and ready for use about the time schools usually open in the valley.

Riley District

For several years past a large amount of ore, estimated to contain several hundred tons, has been lying on the dump at the Haggin mine, about fifteen miles distant from the Riley mill. Recently Mr. C. Anthony, of Darwin, bought the ore, leased the Riley mill, and is now putting it in repair. As soon as the hottest part of the season is over Mr. Anthony will put teams to work hauling the ore to the mill, where it will be worked. The ore from the Haggin mine is so high grade that much of it was hauled by team all the way to Mojave, and was shipped thence to San Francisco. Even with the great expense in getting it to the city the ore paid large profits.

Terrible Disaster.

The fire at the Gould & Curry mine, at Virginia City, was a terrible disaster. It broke out below the 1300 foot level, but the origen of it is not known. From the 400 foot level the following miners were taken out dead from suffocation: John Trounce, Joncey Morgan, R. C. Boyes, W. C. Carpenter, Andrew Bean and Foster Hamilton. Six men were shut up in the 1500 foot level. To rescue these a drift was run between the Con. California and the Best & Belcher. Up to latest reports the fate of these men had not been ascertained.

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM.]

VIRGINIA CITY, July 1.—Attempt made to reach the men this morning from the Sutro tunnel. The timber in the level is still burning and attempt unsuccessful. Little hope of rescue entertained.

A Wedding.

A few years ago Dr. Long, now of Lone Pine, made the acquaintance of a lady in Iowa named Miss Ruth B. McEvoy. The doctor afterwards came to California and traveled about looking for a place to settle. Last Fall he came to Lone Pine and was so well pleased with the place and Owens Valley that he determined to stay. On Wednesday evening Miss McElroy arrived at Lone Pine; next day the couple came to Independence and were married. Lots of friends join in wishing them happiness and prosperity.

NOTICE.

The report that the Fourth of July celebration at Independence has been given up is unfounded, and the persons who put such report in circulation are hereby denounced as liars.

FOOD FRAUDS.

THE SHAMEFUL USE OF LIME AND ALUM IN CHEAP BAKING POWDERS.

Many food frauds, such as chicory coffee or watered milk, although they are a swindle in a commercial sense, are often tolerated because they do not particularly affect the health of the consumer; but when an article like baking powder, that enters largely into the food of every family, and is relied upon for the preparation of almost every meal, is so made as to carry highly injurious, if not rankly poisonous, elements into the bread, the entire community is endangered, and it is the duty of the press to denounce the practice in the most emphatic terms.

Among the important discoveries by the food analysis is that by Prof. Mott, the U. S. Government Chemist, of large amounts of lime and alum in the cheap baking powders. These are, one the most dangerous, and the other the most useless adulterant yet found in the low-grade, inferior baking powders. It is a startling fact that of the many brands of baking powders so far analyzed, none of them, with the single exception of the Royal Baking Powder, was found free from both lime and alum. The chief service of lime is to add weight. It is true that lime, when subjected to heat, gives off a certain amount of carbonic acid gas, but a quick-lime is left—a caustic so powerful that it is used by tanners to eat the hair from hides of animals, and in dissecting rooms to more quickly rot the flesh from the bones of dead subjects. A small quantity of dry lime upon the tongue, or in the eye, produces painful effects; how much more serious must these effects be on the delicate membranes of the stomach, intestines and kidneys, more particularly of infants and children, and especially when the lime is taken into the system day after day, and with almost every meal. This is said by physicians to be one of the causes of indigestion, dyspepsia, and those painful diseases of the kidneys now so prevalent. Instances of the most serious affections of the latter organs from drinking lime water found in some sections are noted in every medical journal.

Adulteration with lime is quite as much to be dreaded as with alum, which has heretofore received the most emphatic condemnation from every food analyst, physician and chemist, for the reason that, while alum is probably partially dissolved and passed off in gas by the heat of baking, it is impossible to destroy or change the nature of the lime in any degree, so that the entire amount in the baking powder passes, with all its injurious properties, into the stomach. When we state that the chemists have found twelve per cent, or one-eighth of the entire weight of some samples of baking powder analyzed, to be lime, the wickedness of the adulteration will be apparent.

Pure baking powders are one of the chief aids to the cook in preparing perfect and wholesome food. While those are to be obtained of well-established reputation, like the Royal, of whose purity there has never been a question, it is proper to avoid all others.

—The phylloxera insect, which has done so much of late years to destroy the French vineyards, first made its appearance among them more than twenty years ago; and although immense sums have been expended upon all sorts of measures for checking its ravages, no considerable degree of success has yet been achieved.—N. Y. Ledger.

—"Well, I never quarrel with any one," remarked a quiet, but cross-grained and sarcastic individual in a down-town office the other day. "No, perhaps not," remarked a gentleman seated near, "but you give others plenty of opportunity of quarreling with you." Did you ever have such an acquaintance?—Philadelphia Call.

TWO LUCKY MEN.

A Barber and a Laborer Win a Big Prize in the Louisiana State Lottery.

Zacharias Messinger is a barber who has pursued his trade of scraping chins and clipping hair at 315 Bush street for some two or three years past. He has during that time had the honor of exercising his tonsorial art upon the caput and physiognomy of Boss Ruckley and in consequence has enjoyed the patronage of the followers of the great Bush-street statesman. His trade was a good one and afforded him a good living, but nothing more, and he has endeavored to increase his store of gold by wooing the fickle Goddess of Fortune by investing in lottery tickets. He paid his addresses more particularly to the good dame who presides over the drawings of the Louisiana State Lottery and has held one or two coupons in nearly every drawing during the last three years. As the gamblers say, he has played in good luck and has nearly always won enough to give him a small profit, so that lately he has been "playing with the money of the bank." A few drawings ago he came down town and as he passed the Chronicle office he saw by the bulletin board that ticket 67,060 had drawn the capital prize of $150,000. He knew that his ticket was 67,000 and something and he rushed home to get it. His delight can be imagined when he found that he held a coupon of the winning ticket, which entitled him to $15,000. He went down to his shop, presented each of his assistants with a suit of clothes, made aarangements for them to carry on the business and last week he and his wife started on a trip to Europe. He expects to be gone about seven months and to spend from $3,500 to $4,000 on the trip. The remainder of the money he will invest in some safe security as a nestegg, and when he gets back will put it into some legitimate business.

The other lucky man is a Swede named A. Monsson, who lives at 1364 Centre street in Oakland. He is a laboring man and has been living a hand-to-mouth existence such as usually falls to the lot of a toiler in the land. He bought a coupon from a peddler as a speculation. When he heard of his good luck he could not believe it, and when convinced that he had won $15,000 turned white with nervous excitement. He is a single man and is now much sought after by the young ladies of his acquaintance.—San Francisco (Cal.) Chronicle, May 4th.

MISSIONARY LIFE.

Its Romance Illustrated by the Success of a Faithful Young Preacher.

Romance is not all confined to the past, or to strange countries. Some of the most peculiar experiences possible to man have been those of missionaries to the American Indians, so recently that the workers who survived the hardships and dangers of those days are still in the prime of their usefulness. One of these missionaries took up his work when he was just past his seminary days, and was assigned to a tribe of Sioux who were peculiarly wild, and singularly wedded to their savage customs. Fresh from his studies, and full of hope and zeal, the young missionary proceeded on his way. On quitting the fort which was nearest his post of duty, the gates of the stockade were opened to let him depart by men who bade him good-bye as they might bid adieu to one already dead. But the missionary drove his wagon ten miles over the wild country, and began to build his house in the very center of one of the Sioux camps. Shortly an Indian, moved by some inexplicable feeling, offered to help him. He raised a little hut, made some furniture, stuffed a mattress, and prepared to do his own cooking, all these things being quite new work for him. Meanwhile, he was an object of curiosity to these new neighbors, who might, at any moment, be moved to bury a tomahawk in his brain.

He had no books, but only stenciled charts of letters which he made himself, and with these he set up school. He had, of course, made himself acquainted with the Sioux dialect, and he contrived, by little gifts, to gather in children and grown people. They liked the hymns and learned them rapidly, and some took an interest in reading; but it was not uncommon for a number of wild savages to rush in and clear the school out.

However, the missionary made friends, and at last built a more substantial wooden structure, with bedrooms for scholars who should dwell in the house, and about this time married a wife who came bravely out from her Eastern home to help him.

If you fancy that the place was quiet and solitary all this while, you are mistaken. In their camp-life the Sioux were seldom quiet, except when sleeping. Night and day there was noise, tumult, agitation, and the missionary worked as carpenter and painter, school-teacher and preacher through it all.

Other white men and women were added to the mission. A boarding-school was under way, but when clothed in Christian fashion, provided with books, and apparently well satisfied with their condition, some outside influence would be brought to bear upon the scholars, and away they would go, books and clothes and all. The greatest prejudice was against teaching the girls any thing, and when the scruples of a few of them were overcome, others resented it. At one time an attack was made upon the mission, two of the teachers murdered, and the missionary and his wife were obliged to flee, with their baby, for their lives. They remained for some time in the shelter of the fort, but at last returned to the mission. The school was resumed, and this time some old and venerated chiefs took part with the missionary. One saved him from being murdered by an old squaw, and another helped him to drive forth a number of the scum of the camp who were at their old work of clearing out the school. When the Indians became friendly, so many of them came to dine with the missionary at once that the provisions of the mission were prematurely devoured. Indians expect unlimited hospitality from all friends.

Fidally, the missionary and his assistants became great favorites amongst the Indians, who were willing at last to be taught to farm; and now well-tilled fields, good log houses, fences, barns, etc., are seen in every direction. Many of the Sioux read and write, and the men have generally given up polygamy. They go to church, send their children to school, and for the most part behave well in the neighborhood of the mission. There are missions, however, where life is as exciting and full of danger as it was in the beginning at the one we have described. The American Indian is, no doubt, the most difficult savage under the sun to civilize.—N. Y. Ledger.

A Strait Laced Tithing Man.

The story is now being told of a conscientious tithing man in a New England town years ago. Gen. H., the big man of the town, had a daughter who was educated in Boston. Once she brought home with her a lover, a Boston man, now a merchant of this city. He went to church with her, sat in the same pew, and when the first hymn was given out found it and handed the hymn book to her. She bowed, and took it. Second hymn, the same. The old tithing man looked and frowned, but did not quite like to offend Gen. H. But he thought it over and over, and his conscience accused him of being a "respecter" of persons. He took his seat in the afternoon resolved to do his duty fearlessly. The hymn was given out. The young man found it, and handed the book to Miss H.; she bowed, and took it. Rap, rap, rap, went the old man's stick. Then pointing to Gen. H.'s pew, "You, you—I mean Gen. H.'s gal and her Boston beau! None of your carryings on here, I say."—New York Sun.

The Cooks of Europe.

After complimenting one of the chefs on his consummate skill in preparing a whole turkey in such transparent jelly that it seemed under a glass case, I ventured to ask him how the cooks of other countries compared with the French. With a smile of indulgence, he replied that a French cook was at the head of every foreign kitchen of distinction, and reminded me, beginning with the name of the queen of England, that every crowned head in Europe possessed one of those artists. "However," he added, "in England one may have a roast well turned by a native, in Germany a potage may be intrusted to a medium German cook, and in Italy I will go so far as to say it would be presumptuous to attempt the preparation of pastes against an Italian chef. After that you can draw the ladder."—Whitehall Review.

IMITATION.

If e'er a goat should don the gorgeous garb
Beneath which erstwhile pulsed the fiery heart
Of Bengal tiger; or, if some swift barb
Should down the regal lion, throwing on the mart
The mantle of his glory, to be bought
And donned by weaklings—oh, believe me, still Remains the goat a goat; the weakling naught
From borrowed plumes has gained. A thrill
Of horror for the sacrilege is felt!
Small soul, refrain! Ape not some splendid he,
Whose glory is his glory. Earth shall melt
In fervent heat ere such as thou canst see
The extent of all its full orbed majesty.
Rushlights dream not how great the great sun be!

THE CZAR'S PRISON HOME.

The Great Catchina Fortress in Which He Hides in Terror.

"Quis custodist ipsos custodes?" is the reflection which springs into one's mind on hearing the rumors as to attempts on the czar's life in his rural retreat at Gatchina. The country house inhabited by the autocrat of all the Russias is nothing more nor less than a fortress surrounded by moats, with a strong garrison, and situated in the midst of an immense camp, in which countless detachments of soldiers, horse, foot, artillery and even engineers, are quartered. Yet even here the life of the sovereign is exposed to various perils, chief among which is the notorious disaffection of portions of his vast army. The time was when the czar could at least reckon on the fidelity of his troops, and on the blind and unreasoning devotion of the liberated serfs. Now all is changed. It is acknowledged that the revolutionary movement has spread with appalling and significant rapidity, even to classes which had always been regarded as trustworthy.

Meanwhile, however, Alexander III has no alternative but to make the best of the situation. Picked soldiers guard him day and night at Gatchina, and the strictist discipline prevails in the fortress castle. A writer who a short time ago had the rare privilege of an introduction to the presence of the czarina, gives a graphic account of his visit, and of the precautions taken to prevent any mishap. Traveling from St. Petersburg to Gatchina in company with Gen. Ignatieff and Gen. Baumgarten, one of the emperor's aides de camp, he noticed all along the route small detachments of engineers encamped in the open air at short intervals from each other. Cossacks, mounted on their small horses, galloped about in every direction. The party were fetched at the station by one of the imperial carriages, which started off at full speed, and, after crossing a bridge, strongly guarded, arrived at a huge gateway, at which the writer and his companions had to show their papers. Thence they were conducted to a wing of the palace, where the same ceremonial was gone through, after which they were taken through a perfect labyrinth of passages and staircases to rooms reserved for them. The writer was asked if he would have luncheon or tea, and was then left to himself until the hour appointed for his audience. At noon Gen. Baumgarten came to fetch him.

On the way to the central building he saw the steps crowded with sentries, who in turn presented arms with such a din that he shrewdly suspected that the noise was intended to warn their comrades further off of the arrival of a stranger. Next a large hall, in which 100 soldiers of the guard were on duty, was traversed. At the further end the visitor had again to exhibit his papers, and after ascending a magnificent staircase and crossing a hall in which a gigantic Moor in a superb costume, and two huge Teherkesses armed to the teeth with dirks and pistols were stationed, he was introduced by a man servant into a small but elegant drawing room, whence he passed, under the conduct of one of the gentlemen on service, into the empress' reception room. After half an hour's conversation, in the course of which her majesty remarked that there were some very impious men in Russia, the writer withdrew, but ere he took leave of Gen. Baumgarten the latter, referring to the frankness with which he had spoken, told him that no Russian would have dared give advice to the czarina, jokingly adding: "Take care! You may be sent to Siberia." What can be more characteristic than this rapproachment of the aide de camp's grim jest about Siberia and the precautions taken by the sovereign to avert all danger from himself and his family.—London Telegraph.

The Pressman's Artistic Work.

You have often heard the expression "artist's proof," in alluding to pictures, and there are many curio collectors who make a specialty of them. When a reproduction is made either in lithography, photogravure or steel engraving, the stone or plate is inked or colored and a fine piece of paper laid upon this. Then the engraver rubs his hand or a brush carefully over every bit of surface until all the shadows and outlines are rubbed in. It is run through a press slowly, and after being allowed to remain the proof is carefully pulled off the plate. This is the artist's proof, and is supposed to be perfect. Other proofs taken after that are not so carefully taken, and for that reason the artist's proof is considered preferable.

The fine work on cuts that claim artistic merit is not known to the public generally. An artist may draw beautifully and the engraver do his work handsomely, but the foreman of the presroom, who does not appear in the case, is the one who must make or spoil the picture. The time he spends in hunting for the lights and shades, bringing up or lowering the impression before the plate goes to press, is not recognized by those who look at the picture when it goes forth in its perfect condition. With a rough press proof before him and the artist's proof, he cuts little strips out here and pastes on little bits there that make the press proof look like a section of crazy patchwork. His work is laborious and he has to be a careful man to realize the artist's idea.—Globe-Democrat.

Had Seen the Wrap Before.

"Yes," said a prominent retail dealer in articles of feminine adornment, "we expect to have a number of wraps, bonnets, etc., returned to-day. You know we, like the rest of the big shopkeepers, send things home on approval to people we know, and I'm afraid a good many people take advantage of this method by securing elaborate pieces of wearing apparel for special occasions at no cost to themselves, wearing the article once, you know, and then returning. I have here a $40 spring wrap which a west Arch street lady will have to pay for. She had it sent home Saturday, and this morning it came back, but we will not credit her with it. Why? Because I was taking a promenade on Walnut street yesterday and walked three blocks right behind that wrap."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

STARVING THE TEETH.

What Foods Make Them Strong and Able to Resist All Forms of Decay.

Teeth are just as easily starved to death as the stomach, said a lecturer before a Brooklyn audience the other night. The fact is that you and your fathers have from generation to generation been industriously starving your teeth. In one way it is a blessing to have been born of poor parents. What food the poor give their children is of a variety that goes to make strong bones and teeth. It is the outside of all the grains of all cereal foods that contains the carbonate and phosphate of lime, and traces of other earthly salts, which nourish the bony tissues and build the frame up. If we do not furnish to the teeth of the young that pabulum they require, they can not possibly be built up. It is the outside of corn, oats, wheat, barley and the like, or the bran, so called, that we sift away and feed to the swine, that the teeth actually require for their proper nourishment. The wisdom of man has proven his folly, shown in every succeeding generation of teeth, which become more and more fragile and weak. These flouring mills in Minneapolis are working destruction upon the teeth of every man, woman and child who partakes of their fine bolted flour. They sift out the carbonate and the phosophates of lime in order that they may provide that fine white flour which is proving a whitened sepulcure to the teeth. Oatmeal is one of the best foods for supplying the teeth with nourishment. It makes the dentine, esmenthum and enamel strong, flint-like and able to resist all forms of decay. If you have children never allow any white bread upon your table. Graham bread is made of whole wheat ground, not bolted, so that the bran, which contains the minute quantities of lime, is present. To make a good, wholesome nourishing bread, take two bowls of wheat meal and one bowl of white or bolted flour, and make by the usual process. Nothing is superior to Boston brown bread for bone and tooth building. This is made out of rye meal and corn meal. Baked beans, too, have a considerable supply of these lime salts and should be on your tables, hot or cold, at least three times a week. The teeth should be cleansed at least five times a day. Without this the particles of food, which contain acids and adhere, eat gradually into the enamel. Use castile or other good soap on the brush. Powdered chalk and castile soap make the best dentifrice. In brushing the teeth always brush up and down from the gum instead of across, or, to close the lecture in the actual words of the lecturer, "Brush away from the gum and on the grinding surfaces of your teeth."—Albany Argus.

SUPERFLUOUS WOMEN.

The Peculiar State of England's Social System at the Present Day.

The usual retort, when women complain of want of remunerative employment, is that they should not work, but find men to support them. As there are 500,000 more women than men in England, it is obviously impossible that every woman should have a husband. This state of things is as bad in Germany also. The preponderance of the women over the men is greatest in the professional and upper middle classes. Among the richer aristocracy of England, and the absolutely working people, the sexes are still equal in number, and women can still marry. But the sons of clergymen, officers, civil servants, lawyers, doctors and some of the country gentry find the struggle for existence too great in this kingdom; they emigrate, or leave the country by joining the military or naval service. Their sisters all remain at home, unable to find husbands, and uneducated for work, even domestic work. These "superfluous women" most undoubtedly, as a body, peform the first duty of their sex—that of being charming; they are often handsome, are generally well mannered and well dressed. They are "charmers," but there is no one to charm. They know very well that their chances of marriage are almost nil; therefore, should a solitary suitor with even a modest competency appear, they feel driven to accept the first man who asks them, whether they care for him or not, and most generally they do not. Their parents wish to get rid of them, so they marry without love. An evil arises out of this, more ghastly than can be described. The marriage of convenance is a recognized social institution abroad. In England, in this nineteenth century, the women of the upper middle classes adopt it without acknowledging it. However we may affect to deny it, there is a vast amount of married unhappiness in all classes. The fault is sometimes ascribed to the present degeneracy of women and sometimes to the deterioration of the men. The fact really lies in our social system, which gives a woman neither work nor money and obliges her to sell herself before she has lost her only saleable commodities—youth and beauty. As there exists four "superfluous women" to one man, the female has no choice, while the lordly male has the greater number from whom to pick and choose. Therefore, in this country, many women have not only no chance of marrying at all, but no freedom of selection whatever.—National Review.

SPINAL WEAKNESS AND LUNG TROUBLES.

56 PRINCE STREET, NEW YORK, March 25, 1884.

Having been troubled with pains in back and chest during the last Winter, I was compelled to remain at home unable to attend to business, until I was advised by a friend to try one of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. After applying one to my chest and one to my back, in three hours I found relief which I had not got in over three months. I cheerfully recommend them to persons having spinal weakness and lung troubles.

A LUCKY MAN.

"A lucky man is rarer than a white crow," says Juvenal, and we think he knew. However, we have heard of thousands of lucky ones and we propose to let their secret out. They were people broken down in health, suffering with liver, blood and skin diseases, scrofula, dropsy, and consumption, and were lucky enough to hear of and wise enough to use Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," the sovereign blood purifier, tonic and alterative of the age.

Some old dinner customs still prevail. The Romans used to recline at their banquets, and the habit of lying at public dinners still prevails.

THE EFFECTS OF MENTAL EXHAUSTION.

Many diseases, especially those of the nervous system, are the products of daily renewed mental exhaustion. Business avocations often involve an amount of mental wear and tear very prejudicial to physical health, and the professions, if arduously pursued, are no less destructive to brain and nerve tissue. It is one of the most important attributes of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, that it compensates for this undue loss of tissue, and that it imparts new energy to the brain and nerves. The rapidity with which it renews weakened mental energy and physical vitality is remarkable, and shows that its invigorating properties are of the highest order. Besides increasing vital stamina, and counteracting the effects of mental exhaustion, this potential medicine cures and prevents fever and ague, rheumatism, chronic dyspepsia and constipation, kidney and uterine weakness and other complaints. Physicians also commend it as a medicated stimulant and remedy.

Mrs. M. A. Dauphin of Philadelphia, is well known to the ladies of that city from the great good she has done by means of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She writes Mrs. Pinkham of a recent interesting case. "A young married lady came to me suffering with a severe case of Prolapsus and Ulceration. She commenced taking the Compound and in two months was fully restored. In proof of this she soon found herself in an interesting condition. Influenced by foolish friends she attempted to evade the responsibilities of maturity. After ten or twelve days she came to me again and she was indeed in a most alarming state and suffered terribly. I gave her a tablespoonful of the compound every hour for eight hours until she fell asleep, she awoke much relieved and evidently better. She continued taking the Compound, and in due season she became the mother of a fine healthy boy. But for the timely use of the medicine she believes her life would have been lost."

WORSHIP OF GAB.

A Class of Legislators Who Deserve Ignominious and Speedy Retirement.

In this day of progress there is no error more general and more deleterious to our material and intellectual prosperity than our senseless worship of gab. It is not a worthy appreciation of the beauties of true and pure eloquence. But those who are gifted with a copious flow of impracticable and useless words have educated the people to the idea that no man is fit for a legislator unless he is endowed with a constant ebullition of gas. And although every man of experience and thought will at once acknowledge that not one in a hundred of those who are as tireless in their talk as the winds on the prairies are fit for any thing practical in the world, as legislators they are totally incapable of originating a practical law, or of successfully remodeling a bill offered by any one else. In this matter we have some readers who have had experience in legislative folly, and they know how little reliance can be placed in an inveterate talker in arranging practical legislation. It is the calm, cool, thinking men, who have gathered up the great lessons of life in a severe and close conflict with the world. Colleges may make scholars, but it takes something additional to make men.

Those who have done most in forming and perpetuating the institutions of our country were not orators, but men of thought, experience and of mature judgment. Great principles are evolved and important questions settled by deep and close investigation in the private office, and in the closer conflict of minds in the committee-rooms. Speeches in the public halls of legislation have nothing to do with the settlement of great questions. They are made for the gaping crowd.

Our halls of legislation are crowded with lawyers, to the exclusion of the various branches of industry. This would not be so objectionable if a better class of lawyers were selected. It is well known in this learned profession, to be successful a law firm should always have as one of the partners a good "office lawyer." This means a man of practical sense enough to get up the papers and pleas in the right form. A man who can put himself down to the preparation of business. The other partner should be a good "jury lawyer." This is one who can spread the eagle and tell the dirty anecdotes. In the profession there is too large a proportion of the latter class. And our readers will bear witness that if any one of the firm becomes a candidate for the Legislature or Congress, it is invariably the one who has the "gift of gab," instead of the one who has by study and a well-balanced mind brought success to the law firm. In this way our legislative and congressional halls are filled with impractical men. What better evidence do we want of this fact than the frequent and constant passage of laws which are unconstitutional, and that, too, after going through the scrutiny of the judiciary committee, composed of lawyers, for the express purpose of checking unconstitutional legislation. This would not be the case if the office instead of the jury lawyer was elected. And this brings us back to the question—our great error of gab worship. We want more thinking and fewer talking men in higher places. A gassy member of Congress is an expensive animal. Every set speech he makes to empty benches costs several thousand dollars, and does no good. And a large portion of our extravagant expenditures and our protracted and useless sessions of Congress grow out of the practice of taking for a Congressman the wrong member of the firm, or the wrong member of the community. Gas instead of sense, imprudence instead of modest merit, is too often the man of the popular crowd. If there be a man in any community who has never done any thing in the world except to study graceful gestures, and ornament his language with stolen quotations from the literature of the past, he is selected to be the man to frame grave laws for the government of the diversified interests of a continent.

The past history of every State in this Union, and of the United States, shows that the reliable practical men are those who have matured and disciplined their minds in the great industrial interests, agriculture, manufacture, mechanics or merchandise. These are the interests of the world, and from these we want more men of practical experience and moral firmness. If the people would cease running after mere gab, and seek after plain, practical men, who know and who sympathize with those who labor, our rights would be better respected and our institutions be longer perpetuated.—Boston Budget.

An Expensive Luxury.

A German, now visiting in this country, writes to his home paper as follows concerning our colleges: "In America, in this land of the free, it is the sad fact that university culture is a prize which is only accessible to the sons of rich men." His inquiries were very exact. "Among the 140 students who had completed their studies at Yale college this year (1886) I obtained answers from 109. According to their reports the average cost for the four years' course amounted to $960. There were great differences in individual cases; one had succeeded in 'getting through' at the cost of $150 a year; another needed no less than $3,500 annually. I know a German porter in the States whose eldest son passed a brilliant examination at Princeton; but father and son agreed that it was impossible to pursue his studies there on account of the frightful costliness. Study at an American university is a most expensive luxury."—Chicago Times.

THROUGH WEST IRELAND.

A Country Unsurpassed for Grand and Surprisingly Beautiful Scenery.

Some two and a half miles from Letterfrack is a picturesque bridge crossing the River Danross, which flows below through bending branches of trees. Here the country opens out somewhat, and from the bridge is caught the first view of the Pass of Kylemore, so surprisingly beautiful that its beauty must be seen and felt—it can not be described. A valley, wide and level, and flooded with sunshine, to the left a tall mountain rises sheer out of a calm lake at its base; the sides of this mountain are thickly wooded half way up, the other half bare and glistening with a hundred streamlets that flow from their source above. Standing out of the road, contrasting sharply with the dark green of the pines, is a castle built of white stone, and a little further down the banks of the lake rises the spire of a beautiful memorial chapel, built by the owner of the place in memory of his wife. On the right of the road, in crescent-shaped sweep, the Diamond mountain and others of the Twelve Pins lift their heads, their bare, craggy sides beautified by an ethereal blue mist, like a soft vail thrown over, yet in no way hiding them. And so does the valley wind and twist that all these mountains seem to move and shift, now in, now out; the one that a few minutes ago was in front, now peeps over the necks of two others. Then the contrasts of color, light and shade, baffle description. The blue heights, the dark wood (from which Call-mor-Kleymore, or big wood—the place takes its name), the white castle and church, the lake, black with shadow in parts sparkling like diamonds where it catches the light; above and around, and penetrating every thing, the vivid gold of the sunshine—all made an entrancing world, that once seen and felt will be loved forever. Here, too, are the lovely gardens of Kylemore Castle, and through the woods, wild flowers and heath—the white Mediterranean heath among them—and ferns to delight all who are happy enough to have time to linger. But I think few who come here will care much to look at the artificial gardens and hot-houses—they are almost out of keeping with such grand nature, and the people of the country never tire of repeating: "Barrin' the castles and gardens, every easthly thing here is as God made it—it's all nature; nothing artificial in our country."

Of all the woods that once shaded and made part of the wealth of Connaught, this of Kylemore is the only one left in this part of the country. It is one of the peculiarities of the scenery throughout the western Irish high lands that the absence of trees is not felt as if it were a loss, or as if it marred the perfection of the landscape. It is with surprise one suddenly remembers that, with the exception of a fuchsia hedge, or a few straggling shrubs, or bushes along the roadside, no trees have been seen for miles and miles, but they were not missed.—*Cor. THE ERIE CANAL.

Major Poore's Recollections of the Opening of the Great Water-Way.

I have a faint recollection, for I was a small boy then, of the grand celebration at New York of the opening of the canal from Lake Erie to the Hudson river. On the 25th of October, 1825, eight years and four months from the time the work commenced, the Erie canal was completed, and on that day the Seneca Chief, with De Witt Clinton, then Governor of the State of New York, Lieutenant-Governor Tallmadge and various committees on board, left Buffalo for the Hudson river. Along the entire line of the canal, within hearing distance of each other, heavy artillery were placed, and the starting of the Seneca Chief from Buffalo was carried to the city of New York as fast as sound could travel, and by the same means it was announced in Buffalo that this great event was known in New York. This was before the present mode of communicating information by telegraph had been known; but the plan was so well executed that in one hour and thirty minutes from the firing of the first gun in Buffalo, the echo was heard in New York and returned to Buffalo. It was a day of great rejoicing throughout the State, and the arrival of the "Chief" at the various places along the line was signalized with great pomp and splendor. Every city and village had prepared its festival, and throughout the whole line, from the lake to the ocean, it was a voyage of triumph. On the 2d of November the Seneca Chief reached the city of Albany, eight days from Buffalo, and on the 4th she arrived in the city of New York.

When the fleet, which was composed of the Seneca Chief and several steam and other craft from Albany, New York and other places on the river, reached Sandy Hook, Governor De Witt Clinton proceeded to perform the ceremony of commingling the waters of the lake with the ocean by pouring a keg of Lake Erie water into the Atlantic when he delivered the following address:

"This solemnity at this place on the first arrival of vessels from Lake Erie is intended to indicate and commemorate the navigable communication which has been accomplished between our Mediterranean seas and the Atlantic ocean in about eight years, and to the extent of more than 425 miles, by the wisdon, public spirit and energy of the people of the State of New York; and may the God of the heavens and the earth smile most propitiously on this work, and render it subservient to the best interests of the human race."—Ben: Perley Poore, in Boston Budget.

WISE MONKEYS.

How They Are Taught to Act as Skillful Workmen, Detectives of Bad Money and Good Water.

In the island of Sumatra the common monkey is the bruh, or pig-tailed monkey, and he becomes a docile and intelligent servant. What he has to do is to gather cocoanuts. Of course nothing is easier for a four-handed fellow than to climb tall trees and throw down nuts, but the bruh does better than that; he selects the nuts, gathering none but the ripe ones, and, what is more, he picks only as many as his master wishes.

So useful is this animal that gathering nuts has become, one may say, his trade in that part of the world. A man having captured and trained a gang of them, marches them around the country to get in the harvest, hiring them out on different plantations. Then, when the nuts are all picked, or the laborers too numerous, gangs of them are taken to the English colonies at Cape Town, and hired out like any workmen, or coolies, as they are called.

A Siamese ape has reached a step higher, it is said. The story is told by an Austrian who lived in Siam that this ape is able to tell by the taste whether coin is good or bad, and merchants employ him for the purpose of detecting counterfeits.

Within a few months a gentleman of India has tried his hand at training monkeys, and he reports to the Asiatic Society of Bengal his success in teaching them to pull punkahs. A punkah—perhaps you know—is an immense fan, hung from the ceiling and moved back and forth by means of a rope outside the room. It keeps a whole room cool, and in that climate is necessary for a white man to eat or sleep with any comfort. A monkey who can pull one, then, is as useful as a man, and is a true worker.

Another valuable monkey is the chacma of Africa. When young this baboon is very teachable, and is often kept by the Kaffirs as a domestic animal. He takes the place of a dog, growling when a stranger comes near, and if it becomes necessary to defend his master's property, he is much stronger than any dog.

The chacma easily learns to blow the bellows of a smith, and to drive horses or oxen; but his greatest use in that country is to find water.

In the hot season, when the earth is parched and springs and streams are dry, the owner of a tame chacma takes him out to hunt for the water they all must have.

The intelligent monkey seems to know what is wanted, or perhaps he knows by his own feelings what to look for, and he goes carefully over the ground, looking earnestly at every tuft of grass, and eagerly sniffling the breeze on every side. Whether he scents it or not is not known, but if there is water in the neighborhood he is sure to find it. It may be a deep spring, in which case he sets to work digging down to it; and it may be a certain very juicy root, which often serves instead of water. He gets that out also; and let us hope he has his full share of it, to pay for his work.—St. Nicholas.

FILTH IN JAIL.

Sanitary Condition of a Large Number of Reformatory Institutions.

As civilization advances, the treatment of the unfortunate and criminal classes is said to become more humane, and as a Nation we love to boast of our prison and asylum reforms; but now and then humanity receives a rude shock from revelations coming out of these very signs of our advancement. With one or two exceptions the prison pens of war times, for whose condition there was, at least, the partial excuse of necessity and the bitterness engendered by the strife—we say with one or two exceptions, these places are to-day surpassed by prisons in both the South and the North, while city jails and work-houses are notoriously bad and often criminally managed. The plumbing inspector of Minneapolis recently made an inspection of the county jail, wherein he found a reeking abomination of filth, for the long continued existence of which no excuse can be offered, for the officials have been notified more than once of its bad sanitary condition. Filth alone, it is well known, will breed crime, and it certainly is a fit environment for other extremely bad and easily avoided conditions which maintain in almost all jails, viz., the commingling of the hardened criminal and the novice in the milder forms of law-breaking; but it is the sanitary condition of these places to which our readers' attention is called. In the Minneapolis jail Mr. Hazen found a veritable cess-pool in the basement, caused by the wash-water running from the jail apartments above. The plumber had used the convenient and inexpensive putty to make his joints, a material quite largely in use in this, as, no doubt, in many another city, and the old and cheapest forms of closets, poorly set, had also been used, and they were sadly out of joint. An enlightened public sentiment will correct these abuses, but the correction is always specific. One job at a time, and that after infinite harm has been done, seems to be all that the public can handle. The ounce of prevention has never been weighed by this public, and it still seems a pound to the men whom we all love to honor with our franchises. To employ an architect to build a jail would be the heighth of folly and the acme of extravagance, but soon the voice of the architect will be heard, not crying out against old abuses, but as a warning to avoid all such calamities, and the sooner that voice is heard the better.—Northwestern Architect.

French Drama in Chicago.

The Bernhardt engagement has brought out all the French scholars in Chicago. Never before had we suspected that there were so many able linguists in the midst of us. Gen. Stiles, we have just discovered, speaks French like a native of Paris (Vermilion county). He attended the "Frou-Frou" performance last evening with his friend Judge Prendergast. The judge is a proficient Greek and Latin scholar, but he knows little of French, his vocabulary being limited to such phrases as "fo par," "liaison," "kelky shoze," and "olly bonnur," so Gen. Stiles had to explain the play to him as it progressed last evening.

"Now what is she saying?" the judge would ask.

"She said 'Good evening,'" the general would answer.

"Does 'bung swor' mean 'good evening?'" the judge would inquire.

"Yes."

"Oh, what rot!" the judge would exclaim, and then a dude usher in one of Willoughby & Hill's $19 dress suits would teeter down the aisle and warn the gentlemen not to whisper so loud.

Presently Col. William Penn Nixon, the gifted editor of The Inter Ocean, came along and slipped into the seat next to Gen. Stiles. He had an opera glass, and he leveled it at once at Bernhardt's red, red hair.

"Do you speak French?" asked Gen. Stiles in the confidential tone of a member of the citizens' committee.

"Oony poo," said Col. Nixon, guardedly.

"Vooley voo donny moy voter ver de lopera?" asked the general, motioning toward the opera glass.

"Mong doo! What—I want of zhoomels?" cried Gen. Stiles. "Zhoomels is twins!"

"Par bloo?" said Col. Nixon; "it is not twins, it is opera glasses."

"You're all wrong, William," urged the general. "The French idiom is 'the glass of the opera.' 'Ver' is glass, and 'de lopera' is of the opera."

"I have heard them called lornyets," suggested Judge Prendergast, in the deferential tone of a young barrister seeking a change of venue.

"Well, I don't know what the general's opera glass is," said Col. Nixon, "but this one of mine is a 'lay zhoomels.'"

"Call it what you please," replied the judge, "it is de tro as far as I am concerned until the corpse de bally makes it ontray."

"I thought you didn't speak French," said Gen. Stiles, turning fiercely upon the judge.

"Oh, well," the judge explained, apologetically. "I'm not what you and the colonel would call oh fay—I'm a june primmer at the business, but when the wind is southerly I reckon I can tell a grizet from a garsong."

Chicago society is still in considerable doubt as to where Bernhardt should be located in the artistic scale. A good many of the elite think that her Fedora is second to Fanny Davenport's and there are very many others who prefer Clara Morris' Camille. We notice that the popular inquiry in cultured circles is "Have you been to see Bernhardt?" not "Have you been to hear Bernhardt?"

"Oh, you don't know how I enjoyed Bayernhayerdt the other evening!" exclaimed one of our most beautiful and accomplished belles. "Her dresses are beautiful, and they do say she is dreadfully naughty!"—Eugene Field in Chicago News.

WOMEN ON THE SEA.

A Few Valuable Points of Advice From One Who Has Been There.

That there are a large number of people going abroad this season was demonstrated by the eager listeners who gathered about a lady who has crossed the Atlantic many times. It was an afternoon reception, and one lady said that it was strange that nobody ever wrote a detail of the things necessary for a sea voyage; the impediments of a sea voyage, as it were. "You want to wear a pair of congress gaiters," said this shepherdess of the ocean, in response, "for there is infinite distress in the bending over to button boots, and your maid is sure to have the mal de mer worse than yourself. Every small comfort is such a relief from the dreadful nausea that possesses you. No, I know no preventive for the horrible feeling of it. Pounded ice helps a little; it sort of paralyzes the stomach, only; but it is better to eat something, even though you throw it up again, for the retching upon emptiness is exhausting. Be sure and buy your steamer chairs before sailing; the steamship companies ought to provide them, but they do not. You store them in Liverpool until you return. I provide me a blue cloth wrapper with a plaiting about the bottom of it, so that it will look as dressy as possible, and a big double-breasted ulster, that I button upon me, and a hood with an elastic in it, to cover over the hair—very pretty ones can be found in New York; then I carry warm shawls and a nubia to tie about my neck. And if you value your comfort do not fail to wear a pair of woolen stockings, else your legs will be very cold, and over them you must wear a pair of thick cloth drawers. I never wear any corset, but just wrap me up in these garments like a mummy. Whatever else you forget let it not be a square of stout linen with pockets in it, like a shoe-bag. Tack it upon the wall of your state-room and put into it the pocket-combs, brushes, bottles, needles, thread, pins, soap, rags, any thing and every thing of every-day use you might possibly require. It is no use to lay out things loose for convenience, for at the first lurch of the vessel away they all go, and you will never get trace of them again on that voyage. My plan has always been to stay upon deck all day, and have the stewards bring me up something to eat, and never go into the saloon. As many times as I have crossed I am always sick. I always think what a fool I am to venture the voyage, but then I feel so well when I get my feet upon the ground and do not remember the discomforts of the crossing. Another thing you will find a great luxury is a small feather pillow. I cover one with black silk and carry it with me constantly. In Germany they use cotton pillows, and many a stiff neck I have had trying to sleep upon them. Before leaving New York I have my hair thoroughly shampooed and dressed high upon my head, in puffs, and then I only brush it up every day from the nape to the top of my head. One is not able to comb one's hair. O, that is only a few of the things I could tell for your guidance," said the sprightly wife of a much-traveled American Minister at foreign courts. And all the women sat entranced, delighted with the practical suggestions so freely given and so gratefully received.—Washington Star.

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Its Vocabulary the Most Heterogeneous That Ever Existed.

By actual enumeration of the words contained in the best dictionaries, it has been ascertained that 13,330 English words are of Saxon origin and 29,354 of classical origin. In consequence of the popular nature of the Teutonic words in the language, the Saxon element largely preponderates in the works of our greatest writers. The pronouns, numerals, prepositions and auxiliary verbs, the names of the elements and their changes, of the season, the heavenly bodies, the divisions of time, the features of natural scenery, the organs of the body, the modes of bodily action and posture, the commonest animals, the words used in earliest childhood, the ordinary terms of traffic, the constituent words in proverbs, the designations of kindred, the simpler emotions of the mind, terms of pleasantry, satire, contempt, indignation, invective and anger are, for the most part, of Saxon origin. Words indicating a more advanced civilization and complex feelings, and most of the terms employed in art, science, mental and moral philosophy are of classical origin. The English language, which is now spoken by nearly one hundred millions of the earth's inhabitants, is in its vocabulary one of the most heterogeneous that ever existed. There is, perhaps, no language so full of words, evidently derived from the most distant sources, as English. Every country of the globe seems to have brought some of its verbal manufactures to the intellectual market of England: Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Celtic, Saxon, Danish, French, Spanish, Italian, German—nay, even Hindustani, Malay and Chinese words are mixed together in the English dictionary.—Phrenological Journal.

BERMUDA HOUSES.

Durability of the Peculiar Building Material Used in Their Construction.

In speaking of the Bermudas, Rev. John Snyder said: "One of the prettiest sights, I believe, I ever saw was when I went up into one of their lighthouses and looked out upon the islands below on the one hand and the wide ocean on the other. The landscape was green with palms and all kinds of tropical plants, and the earth was carpeted with grass. The natives build in small villages which dot this country on every side, and the white tops of these village houses, down among the the palms, and with a carpet of green grass for a background, make a picture one must see to appreciate. The air is balmy, and said to be a wonderful curative for consumptives."

"Of what material do they build houses in Bermuda?"

"Of coral; that is to say, of a stone found about two feet under the soil at almost any point. This is the work of the coral insect, and has been covered by the soil in the process of forming the island."

"Does the stone stand the weather and answer for all building purposes?"

"Yes, its durability is somewhat remarkable when we consider what the stone is and the way in which it is obtained. The masons go out and remove the two feet of soil which cover the stone, and they find it as soft as wood, perhaps softer than some kinds of our hickory. They cut it out into blocks of any desirable size or shape and leave it exposed to the air a short time, when it becomes as hard as real stone and stands the weather accordingly."

"You spoke of the village house-tops being white; what makes them so?"

"Every peasant and resident of the Bermudas is supposed to paint his house-top at least once a year. The covering is of stone and sometimes almost flat, and as cistern water is their only source of water supply, they paint their roofs that they may better turn the water into their cisterns. Very often you can see about the forts large surfaces arranged in this way to turn water into the cisterns. The earth is removed off a large space of stone and this is so arranged as to turn the water into a common cistern. The stone is all painted, and as I said, looks very beautiful when one looks down from the lighthouse at this snow-white substance among the green grass.—St. Louis Republican.

WHITEHEAD TORPEDOES.

The torpedo that has been adopted by nearly every naval power in Europe is known as the Whitehead, and belongs to what may be designated as the "projectile class," that is, having been started on its course toward the enemy, no control of it is retained by the operator. Most of the various types of this class are wholly submerged when operated against any enemy, and are generally arranged to run at a given depth below the surface, varying from five to fifteen feet.

Naturally, one of the main objects of inventors of torpedoes, as well as of those engaged in other fields of invention, is financial profit. The Whitehead is the only torpedo that has yet proved a success in this respect. It is built of thin sheets of steel, is cigar shaped but without the attached float and is made in three sizes, the largest being 19 feet long by 16 inches diameter, and the smallest 9 feet long by 11 inches diameter. The motive power is compressed air, carried at a pressure of about seventy atmospheres, in a cylindrical reservoir within the torpedo. The speed attained is about 25 miles per hour for a distance of 450 yards. The torpedo is divided into three sections—"forward," "middle and "rear"—containing, respectively, the charge of 70 to 93 pounds of gun cotton; the adjusting mechanism, wherein lies the secret of the inventor, and by which the hydrostatic pressure of the surrounding water is made to regulate the depth of immersion; and the air engines and steering machinery. It is designed to be carried on board a very swift torpedo boat, capable of overtaking the fastest iron-clad, and, when within effective range, to be discharged from the boat with the steering rudder of the torpedo set in such a position as to direct its center toward the enemy. The first motion, or "discharge," is effected through a guide tube in the bow of the boat, either above or below the surface of the water, usually by means of a very small charge of powder, after which, upon reaching the water, the torpedo is propeled by its own engines. The explosion may be made to take place either upon impact with the enemy or after the torpedo has run a given distance.—Scribner's Magazine.

SEA PEARL FISHING.

The Largest and Most Productive Fishery Stations of the World.

The sea pearl fisheries are principally confined to the Persian gulf, coasts of Ceylon, the Eastern archipelago, Australia, the lagoons of many islands in the Pacific and to Central America. Fresh water pearls have, as a rule, but little luster, and are consequently of no great value. For a while the Scotch pearls enjoyed a great reputation. During the summer months the Arabs carry on a sort of pearl fishery on the coast of the Red Sea. They catch the mollusks and lay them in the sun so that they may open quickly. The pearl fisheries in the Persian gulf, especially on the coasts of the island of Bahrein, are also in the hands of the Arabs.

The Ceylon pearl fisheries are carried on on the west coast of Ceylon, in the gulf of Manaar, south of the island of the same name, and also on the west coast of India, near Tuticorn. Experience has shown that few pearls, and these of little value, come from mussels which are not older than five years. During the fifth and sixth year the value doubles, and in the seventh it becomes fourfold. The pearls are not fully matured if they are taken out too soon, and, on the other hand, the animal dies if the pearls remain too long in the shells. For these reasons, at the Ceylon fisheries pearl fishing is prohibited at certain periods. In sorting the pearls they are first passed through a row of baskets, ten or twelve in number. The eighth basket in the row has twenty holes, and the pearls which do not pass through these holes are said to have the "twentieth measure." The other baskets have 30, 50, 80, 100, 200, 400, 600, 1,000 holes, etc., and each basket has its special name. After the pearls have been sorted in this measure they are weighed and their value is noted. China has pearl fisheries near Pakhol. The Phillippine Islands produce large quantities of mother-of-pearl. The entire region from the island of Tawi-Tawi and Lulu to Baselan is one continuous bed of pearl oysters. Here the Malays and Chinese fish in common. The Lulu fisheries, near Tawi-Tawi, are, according to the statement of an Englishman, Mr. Moore, the largest and most productive of all the pearl fisheries in the East Asiatic seas. The pearls which are caught here have always been famous, and the mother-of-pearl is distinguished by its yellow luster, which makes it suitable for many purposes. The most important pearl fisheries in Queensland are in the hands of Sydney capitalists. The fisheries are carried on by Malays, who dive to a depth of six fathoms. The pearl fisheries on the northwest coast of Australia employ a large number of Malays and natives as divers. Recently the English papers have reported the discovery of pearls and mother-of-pearl near New Zealand.

Diving is one of the principal employments for the natives of the Pacific Ocean. Here, likewise, mother-of-pearl is the principal object of the fisheries. The oysters live in large colonies, close together, and are firmly attached to each other; they are attached to the bottom by a ligament or band, starting from their body and running through the shell. In the live animal this band is of a dark green, and sometimes gold bronze color, and fishermen can tell from its color whether the shells contain pearls or not. The shells reach their full size when they are seven years old. When the animal has reached maturity, it tears itself loose from the stones, opens its shell and dies. The shells are then covered with corals and parasites. They become worthless and the pearls are lost. Occasionally pearls are found loose in the shells. These are always of a very fine quality, perfectly round and often very large. But there is hardly one in a thousand oysters which contain such pearls. The natives often lose them, owing to the careless way in which they open the shells. Fine and calm weather is most favorable for pearl fishing. The divers wear no special suit, but simply rub their body with oil, so the sun may not blister their skin. They remain under the water one or two minutes, and bring up oysters from a depth of twenty fathoms. They rarely go to such a depth, but the finest oysters are found there. Thus in many fishing grounds, which were supposed to be exhausted, a great many pearl oysters are found in deep water.

Besides the pearl oyster there is often found in the lagoons of the Pacific Ocean a kind of Venus shell, which often contains pearls of great value. The fishermen do not look for these pearls at all, but it is presumed that it would pay to examine these shells more systematically. In the Pacific there is found another pearl-producing mollusk, whose shells greatly resemble those of the common oyster. They are always found attached to rocks, invariably one by itself; and they are quite rare. Their pearls are always perfectly sound, with a fine luster and a gold color, of about the size of a pea.—N. Y. Star.

Henry George's Wife.

Though Henry George has acquired such large celebrity, his wife's name has hardly been mentioned in the papers that speak of him so often and so much. She is a thorough home body, devoted to her husband and their four children. She is one of the small, plump, cheery bodies that never get down-hearted, and people who have known them a long time say that but for her unflagging devotion and enthusiastic belief in him Mr. George would never have been able to come triumphantly through the long period of straitened means and hard work which preceded his sudden success.—Chicago Tribune.

SATURDAY JULY 9 ..... 1887.

MISCELALNEOUS.

THE FOURTH AT DARWIN.

MR. EDITOR.—At an early hour all Darwin was astir to take part in the celebration of the Nation's natal day, a celebration which was to eclipse by long odds all that had taken place before it or should come after it. The Grand Marshal, Mr. J. Wilson, resplendent in a red, white and blue sash, mounted on a fiery charger, was seen giving directions to his aids who galloped hither and thither, getting the different orders and companies into line. The steed which bore the Grand Marshal was especially admired as proudly conscious of the part he was to play in the proceedings; he impatiently champed the bit and was with difficulty restrained within bounds. He was especially groomed and caparisoned for the occasion by Mr. Jerry Fitzgerald, who would not take a gold mine for him and always affectionately refers to him as "Mose." Once or twice Mose did get beyond control, and making a furious charge down the street caused quite a commotion, for several old ladies and children, in their frantic efforts to get out of the way were thrown down but fortunately no damage was done owing to the skilful manner in which his rider sat him and soothed his perturbed spirit. The car of liberty was beautifully decorated with banting, each State being represented by a little boy in appropriate costume, while above all towered the athletic form of Mr. Murphy as the Goddess of Liberty. The car was drawn by two stately steeds from the stable of C. Anthony. They were perfectly gorgeous; their ears were utilized as flagstaffs by pinning a flag to each. Mr. Henry Mettler as charioteer piloted his charge along the route of the procession to the grand stand. The gay cortegé was a number of blocks in length, the largest ever seen in Darwin. It was carefully timed in passing a given spot and occupied two hours and forty minutes passing Martin Mee's saloon. It was composed of the different orders and societies, who made a striking appearance in their uniforms and regalias. Cap. Jack and a few Braves from Coso in war paint and feathers brought up the rear. At last the grand stand was reached and a programme of extraordinary excellence was begun. Mr. Thompson in a few well chosen remarks congratulated the citizens of Darwin upon the grand style in which they were welcoming the day and the intellectual treat in store for them. He deeply regretted that the rest of the world was not present to enjoy the occasion, but it could not be helped and it was the world's loss, not ours. The reading of the Declaration of Independence by Judge Hawley was next in order, and was followed by Drake's "Address to the Flag." This stirring poem was rendered by Hon. Wm. Farrell in such an impressive manner as to awaken patriotic throbs as big as boulders in every bosom. Next came the oration, by the rising young Demosthenes of our town, John Reddy Esq. Words fail us in attempting to give even a faint idea of the nature and scope of this speech, with its dazzling flights of oratory and many telling points. Toward the close the orator warmed to his subject with intensest enthusiasm; and in a glorious apostrophe to the American Eagle plumed his wings to rise to the heights of metaphor. Having kicked his ladders from under him, so to speak, and soaring to the lofty regions of the empyrean the audience awaited with breathless interest, not unmixed with fear, for his safe descent. It was at this juncture that Sir Jerry Fitzgerald, of Darwin Wash, with the deputation therefrom, made his appearance; advancing upon the platform he took several watermelons curiously emblazoned with the National emblems and presented them to those around, and one also to the orator. Gracefully receiving his the orator held it up to the audience and in glowing terms eulogized this wonderful and highly favored section where all nature was affected with patriotic sentiments, manifested in such a unique and striking manner. Next in order was a song, "The Star Spangled Banner," by Signor C. Anthony, rendered in such an expressive manner as to call forth the loudest plaudits. He was encored three times and was about to respond to the third call when the medical attendant examined his throat and declared that it would be positively dangerous for him to attempt it, and it would be at the risk of losing his voice altogether. At the bare mention of such a possible catastrophe the audience excused the singer from further effort. Several vocal selections of a patriotic order were rendered in fine style by the Darwin Glee Club, consisting of Signors Eddy, Richard, Harry and Jackson. In the afternoon all sorts of games of an exciting and interesting character were indulged in and a magnificent pyrotechnic display concluded the exercises in the evening. Thus was brought to a close the most interesting Fourth of July exercises ever held in Darwin. MINER.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, JULY 9 .....1887.

DIED.

BAXTER—At Independence, July 3, 1887, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Baxter.

Independence is to have an orchestra.

Apricots, pears, peaches and apples are plentiful.

Alfalfa crop is heavy; machines humming in every field.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Russell, of Benton, arrived at Independence on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fitzgerald, from Lookout, spent the Fourth at Independence.

Martin Mee came in from Darwin to spend the Fourth and remained a week in town.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at 8 p. m. on Sunday. Praise service at a quarter to 8. Sunday school at 11 a. m. Everybody made welcome.

Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Goodale, of Fish Springs, came down to attend the celebration. Mr. Goodale turns out with as fine a carriage and team as the county can show.

Mr. Louis Wimberly, of Reno, arrived at Independence Station at the beginning of the week. He drove all the way through in his own conveyance and comes to stay. He will locate on the line of the new canal now being built.

Only the Divine Comforter could alleviate the sore distress of those who waited by the pit at Virginia City where father, husband and son were entombed alive. All that human energy and endurance could do was done to rescue the six unfortunate men but all was in vain.

The celebration of the Fourth at Bishop was a grand success. Many visitors from outside the county attended. All were entertained with generous hospitality. Those who were on their first visit to Inyo county got an excellent idea of the country and the people from the reception given them.

The Supervisors met on Thursday as a Board of Equalization. It will be some days yet before their labors are finished. A good deal of discussion has been had by the Board over the action of the Assassor in assessing mortgages at less than their face value. If this course is followed it will lead to curious results.

At the beginning of the festivities in Robinson's grove on the Fourth of July a pet lamb of Mr. Robinson's took up a position on the platform directly in front of the speakers and singers and remained lying quietly there during the entire proceedings. No wonder that some thought it a part of the proceedings of the day.

Through a misunderstanding of the revenue law the proprietors of the Bishop Creek Brewery got into a difficulty with the revenue officers. The brewery was closed for a day or two, but full satisfaction was given by the proprietors and the concern is now going on as usual. The officers found that there had been no intention to wilfully violate the law.

The memory of Thomas Starr King should be dear to every Californian. No name in the history of our State is deserving of higher honor than his. A movement is now started to erect a suitable monument to his memory. Every old settler should feel bound in a special degree to do something in honor of him who was the tireless, devoted and enthusiastic friend of the soldier. A subscription paper is at the store of N. Rhine.

When returning from the grove on the afternoon of the Fourth the horse ridden by Grand Marshal Laird began to rear and plunge violently. Mr. Laird is a large and powerful man and put such a strain on the bridle that it broke in pieces. The horse at once started off in a mad race and the rider was left apparently without any way of guiding and controlling him. But Mr. Laird proved equal to the occasion; rising up in the stirrups he reached out and caught the horse by the nostrils and held him with so powerful a grasp that he could not breathe, and became quiet without any injury to himself or his rider.

Would Not Be Advised.

Four years ago John S. Gorman bought and located land at Camp Independence, the whole amounting to 280 acres. The first year there were no improvements made on the land. Mr. Gorman is a miner and never had any experience in farming before coming into possession of this land. At present he has sixty acres in alfalfa; forty acres of this were broken up and seeded this Spring. The newly seeded land will give a fair crop this season; the total hay crop will be quite 200 tons; part of this will be wild hay, of blue joint, red clover and other native grasses. Fifty-five acres are in grain, including corn, wheat and oats. Ten acres are laid out for orchard, six acres being already planted; some of the young apple and peach trees are now bearing. When Mr. Gorman went upon the land he was laughed at for his ignorance; it was no good; nothing would grow upon it; there was no water for it; the soil was full of alkali, and worse than all nothing could be got from the land without work. Mr. Gorman was not scared by the last assertion and he did not believe the others. He planted corn, wheat and oats where the alkali was supposed to be thickest; his wise advisers should now go and look at his crops; he made deep drains to carry the water away from the land they said was too dry. Since the drains were made the soil is far more fertile than before. No stagnant pools of alkaline water are left to poison cattle; running streams flow through the pasture and the cattle are rolling fat and as slick as otters. Mr. Gorman began raising horses three years ago; he started with a few head of good mares and now has twenty-five head of as good horses as the county can show. The results accomplished by Mr. Gorman might be equalled in many instances. His success shows the value of energy, industry and good hard common sense. The old fogies who laughed at him when he began now begin to rub their eyes and have a glimmering consciousness that his methods might be worthy of emulation. Perhaps they would try if it were not for the fact that to try means to work.

THE FOURTH AT INDEPENDENCE.

A Glorious Anniversary Celebrated With Enthusiasm

A grand programme was prepared for the celebration of the Fourth at Independence and the whole of it was fully carried out. At sunrise a National salute of 100 guns was fired. Early in the forenoon Grand Marshal John W. P. Laird and his aids, appeared upon Main street; all were well mounted and wore handsome uniforms. A tastefully decorated chariot followed, bearing little girls who carried flags with the name of each State and Territory. The Goddess of Liberty was ideally represented by Miss Maggie Conklin, who was seated in the midst of this beautiful group. A large number of fancy and comic characters followed, the most noticeable of the latter was a group representing the Independence water works. The "works" was a whisky barrel steadied by two unsteady darkies and a bear, the whole mounted on a big dump cart drawn by a diminutive donkey with Uncle Sam holding the reins. A long line of carriages followed filled with people from the surrounding country. The Indepenpendence Brass Band headed the procession, which then marched through the principal streets and finally head for a beautiful grove of trees near town belonging to Mr. E. Robinson. The music of the band was spirited and stirring. The boys were neatly uniformed and marched with the precision of veterans.

IN THE GROVE

A large stand had been erected and seats constructed to accommodate the audience. Mr. J. J. Stewart, of Lone Pine, acting President of the Day, introduced the Chaplain, Rev. J. H. De La Matyr, who offered a fervent prayer, full of piety and patriotism. The ministers of the religion of Christ have ever been patriotic citizens. The choir sang "The Red, White and Blue," Mrs. Matlack, organist; this piece was rendered with great spirit and was warmly applauded. Mr. R. L. Peeler read the Declaration of Independence with fine effect; this glorious proclamation of human rights was received with enthusiastic applause. The choir followed with "America," and were again cheered heartily. The Orator of the Day, A. R. Conklin Esq., was then introduced. The discourse dwelt upon the uprising of the Colonists against kingly tyranny. The battles and marches; the cold and hunger patiently endured and the death bravely dared by Washington and his heroic followers. Independence gloriously won and the right of self-government firmly established. The emancipation of three million slaves, accomplished by him that sprang from the very heart of the people; the humble in spirit and the mighty in intellect; the simple in habit and the Godlike in charity, Abraham Lincoln. A vigorous denunciation was uttered against the lawless wretches, the scum of foreign lands, the anarchists and nihilists, who do not understand and have no sympathy with American institutions. Every one present were in sympathy with these sentiments and applauded heartily. The speaker quoted Scott's lines on love of country:

Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said, etc.

And closed amid cheers. Miss Conklin, assisted by the choir on the chorus, sang "The Star Spangled Banner," and the grand old song was cheered to the echo. The audience then moved to the tables that were set in another part of the grove; here abundance of all good things to eat had been provided, including a barbecued steer. Large as the company was there was enough for all and a royal feast left for a crowd of Indians. After the feast the procession reformed and marched back to Main street

IN TOWN.

Foot races were run and games were had that made great fun for the children. The 100 yard race was contested by Walter Ober and Henry Malone, and was won by the former. Mrs. Willett, Miss Ida McCall and Miss May Shepherd contested for a prize for the best lady rider. The prize was awarded to Miss McCall; the riding of all was exceedingly graceful and the judges had a delicate task to decide which should be declared the winner. Later a match game of baseball was played between the Independence baseball club and a picked nine from among boys around town. Baseball players say this was the best game yet played in the county The impromptu nine played in a style that surprised every body. The Impromptus made the one run that was scored in the first two innings. D. Hessian and W. Ober formed the battery for the Impromptus and to them the close score is due; D. Crough filled the box for the Club with Hamilton catching; the fielding of Ed. Shepherd was a feature of the game. A change of pitcher in the 4th inning by the Impromptus lost them the game, the Club winning by a score of 11 to 8. The attendance at

THE BALL

Was the largest ever seen at a party at Independence. It was a happy thought to build a large dancing platform in the open air. The moon being at full her soft light, mingled with the colored rays from the numerous Japanese lanterns; the handsome costumes of the ladies, and graceful dancing made such a picturesque scene as is rarely witnessed anywhere, the delicious music filling the air completed the perfect whole. Ample preparation had been made to entertain every body at a midnight supper. The busy scenes participated in during the day told upon the dancers, and even the most tireless were willing to retire at 3 o'clock. Our celebration was a

MOST GRATIFYING SUCCESS

In every way, not a single mishap occurring to mar the enjoyment of any one. The birthday of the nation will henceforth be held in greater estimation by all who attended the celebration at Independence.

Nearly Unanimous.

The vote cast last Saturday was nearly unanimous in favor of the irrigation district. Only three adverse votes were cast in the entire district, and these were in the Black Rock Division. In the First Division C. B. Rawson was elected Director; in the Second Division there was a tie between S. A. Deousmore and J. S. Gorman; the Third Division elected H. L. Clark; the Fourth W. L Hunter and the Fifth A. C. Harvey. A special election will be had for Director in the Second District. R. C. Spear was elected Collector, John Anton Assessor and N. Rhine Treasurer. The general result is received with great satisfaction. The tie in the Second District will cause a delay of a few weeks; this is to be regretted but there is no help for it.

A Jolly Party

A good many of those who came to spend the Fourth at Independence stayed in town some days afterward and for their entertainment a party was gotten up on Wednesday evening. The party met in Mairs' hall; the full orchestra was on hand and the company had a jolly good time.

Well Merited.

The Independence Brass Band richly deserve a public entertainment. The boys have been at much expense for instruments and tuition; their progress is something the town may be proud of; they are always ready to give their services freely and we ought to get up something for their benefit.

A Display Wanted

The President of the Nevada State Agricultural Association has written to the INDEPENDENT asking that a display of Inyo county products be made at the coming State Fair of Nevada. The display of our products made at Reno two years ago was a very valuable advertisement for our county. That display in part led to the work now going on preparing for a large settlement near Independence. Since then much greater interest is taken in Owens Valley by the people of Reno, Carson and Virginia City. The President promises if a display of our products is made to do all in his power to make it of service to Inyo county.

Leg Broken.

Last Saturday Walter James, Sr., had his leg broken. He was on his way from Lone Pine to Independence with a heavily loaded spring wagon; while near the Alabama Hills he stood up in the wagon to arrange something about the seat; while in this position the horses moved forward and Mr. James was thrown from the wagon, the wheel passing over his leg and breaking both bones between the knee and ankle. Mr. Barragan came along soon after the accident; he was on horseback and quickly overtook the team, which had kept on traveling, brought it back and lifted Mr. James into the wagon and brought him to town. Dr. Woodin put the bones in place and the patient is now doing well.

SAVAGE CEREMONIES.

Peculiar Customs Obtaining Among the Natives of New Britain.

The most peculiar ceremony practiced by the natives has rarely been witnessed by a white man. I saw one last year, and I will endeavor to describe the incidents of the performance and its meanings. The Duk-duk is supposed to be a spirit which makes its appearance at the day-break of the day on which the new moon appears. It invariably comes from the sea, and as it is daylight two or three canoes, with a platform upon them, are seen coming to the shore. The entire male community of the village awaits the coming on the beach seated in silence. On the platform are two men, leaping and shouting and crying out in shrill tones. They wear a loose robe of leaves woven together and reaching to the knees. On their heads are conical-shaped hats, some six feet high, from the rims of which are hung masks entirely concealing the features. The masks have horrible looking faces painted upon them. The lower portions of the legs are alone visible. As the dress is supposed to represent a cassowary, or New Guinea ostrich, with a human head, the figures upon landing execute a series of hopping steps in imitation of the bird. Meanwhile the natives appear to be frightened. The Duk-duk is to stay in the village a fortnight, and during that period he is at liberty to do whatever he pleases. No woman is allowed to look at him. In fact, as soon as the canoe was sighted, the women all ran away to the bush. After dancing a short time the Duk-duk goes into the jungle and the natives move off slowly to their homes.

In the evening immense quantities of cocoanuts, yams, taro and other food are piled in the center of the village square. As each man brings his contribution the Duk-duk dances around him. If satisfied, he utters a shrill cry; if displeased, the individual receives a tremendous blow with a club. After these food offerings are concluded the ceremonies begin. A large bundle of canes about six feet long and as thick as one's little finger were brought. Five or six young men jumped up, and, holding their hands high above their heads, received heavy blows from this bundle of canes, which were wielded by the Duk-duk. The canes curled round the bodies and at each stroke drew blood. Other young men took their places. Sometimes the Duk-duk would vary the performance by striking with his club. The ceremonies were repeated for ten days and then the Duk-duks took their departure. I believe the origin and meaning of these peculiar ceremonies are that the old natives hold power over the young men. The Duk-duk is always said to belong to some old man who summons it out of the sea. No one knows who is actually dancing in disguise, but they do know that if the old men have ordered the Duk-duk to kill any individual the command will be obeyed without interference from any one. Again, the old men, having become decrepit, can not work in their gardens, and the piles of food offered to the spirit comes into their possession.

Although cannibalism is reported by missionaries to have died out among the islands in the South seas, it is far more common than generally imagined. In New Ireland I saw a big fight between two villages, and after the battle the bodies of those who had fallen were eaten. The bodies, after being scalded in hot water, are scraped with a bamboo knife by old women. An old man cuts up the bodies, taking care to keep the thigh and shin bones, which are used for spearheads. After being wrapped in leaves, the dismembered cadavers are placed in ovens dug in the ground, and in four days are ready for eating. The natives made no concealment of their disgusting meal, and during the feast they held wild dancing and orgies. The preparation of sago, cocoanut and human brains is called saksak, and is in great demand among the women. The females seemed to be more brutal and savage than the men during the cannibal banquet.

With regard to the adaptability of these islands to white colonization, there is no reason why such a scheme should not succeed. There is rich soil, fine climate and plenty of water. Although the natives are savage and suspicious, they can be easily managed by firmness and consideration. None of the men are over five and a half feet in stature, while the women are much shorter. They make good servants, but must be held in check and never allowed any familiarity.—San Francisco Chronicle.

HOW A COLORED BOY BECAME RICH.

Of course a majority of our citizens are opposed to gambling, but there is considerable pleasure when you try it to know that you are going to play a game that is fair. Clifford J. Tweedy, the colored boy who was the lucky holder of the one-tenth of ticket 23,899—the second capital prize of $50,000—received about a week ago his one-tenth, or $5,000, and our readers would perhaps like to know something of this colored boy's life, and how he won the prize, and what he has done and intends doing with his money.

Clifford is a likely colored boy, about twenty-one or twenty-two years of age and was raised by Mr. Henry T. Peay, with whom he has been for the past sixteen years. At the time of his drawing the $5,000 he was in the employ of Mr. Peay, getting $8 per month. He has retained his position with Mr. Peay, and does his work as faithfully as ever.

After receiving his $5,000 he deposited $4,000 in the Georgia Railroad Bank and took one thousand dollars and divided a portion of it amongst his poor colored relations. Be it to his credit too, he did not forget his employer, Mr. Peay, to whom he gave a present of fifty dollars.

He says with the four thousand dollars that he has deposited in the Georgia Railroad he intends to buy Augusta real estate, another sign that he has a level head. In answer to the question how much he had invested before winning he replied that he had bought a ticket regularly every month for the last fifteen months, and it was the fifteenth dollar that did the work.—Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, April 30.

Two Million Gipsies in America.

That there are from one to two millions of Gypsies in America to-day is an assertion I confidently make, based upon a quarter century's study of, and more than three years' actual companionship with, this people in their homes and tents and upon the road; from careful inquiries in all parts of the country, involving much correspondence; from actual lists of Gypsy families and heads of families in my possession, and from moderate computations made with these aids, after careful scrutiny by reliable Gypsy chiefs has been secured. This is a startling statement to thoughtful men.

The Gypsy has been merely regarded as a romancer's bugaboo, or as only existing among us as an occasional straggler along the pleasant countrysides. But their presence and marvelous growth in numbers must be recognized. They will shortly comprise an important factor in social, economic and ethic consideration. How the sly fellows have come, is no especial marvel when known. Before the Revolution, several thousands were here. During that period many thousands more came as impressed British soldiers, deserted and remained, or at the close of the war mustered themselves out and merged into the large nucleus already formed. These were the pioneers which swiftly sent secret word to every part of the inhabitable globe that America was the Gypsy's heaven, and to come to it without delay.—Edgar L. Wakeman in Philadelphia Times.

Walking Easier Than Spelling.

President Lincoln's commissioner of agriculture, Newton, of Philadelphia, is the peg on which all bad spelling stories are hung in Washington. He wrote English as she's spoke, without regard to the arbitrary rules of orthography, and the result was often amusing. One day Gen. Sickles, then lying in a hospital here badly wounded, craved fruit, grapes particularly. A friend, not being able to find them elsewhere, went down to the department of agriculture and asked Commissioner Newton for some.

"I haven't any grapes," replied Newton; "I'd give them to you in a minute for Gen. Sickles if I had, but I'll give you anything else we've got."

"Well," said the friend, "what other fruits have you?"

"Why," said Newton, "I think we have some nectarines, and you're welcome to some of them."

"They'll do very well," said the friend. "Just write me an order to the gardener for some, will you?"

Newton said he would, drew a sheet of paper toward him, and began to write. The date line was all right, for that was printed, but after that his troubles began. "Give bearer," he wrote, "as many"—and then he stopped, for he couldn't spell nectarines, and he knew it. He thought over it for a full minute. Then he threw down his pen, picked up his hat, and said:

"Come, I'll go over with you myself."—Philadelphia Record.

Siberia Convicts.

In a report prepared for the ministerial commission which is now considering the project of gradually diverting the transportation of Russian convicts from Siberia to the island of Saghalien and certain districts in the trans-Caucasian and central Asian frontier provinces, the inspector of the Tiumen-Atchinsk route to Siberia states that during the decade 1876-86 218,578 prisoners passed along that highway. Of this number no less than 2,867 died on the way, and 101,266 were sent from Atchinsk to the most remote eastern settlements. The report furnishes no record of the probably large number who perished on the latter part of the journey. It is also silent as to the causes of the 2,867 deaths between Tiumen and Atchinsk. The fact can not, however, be disguised that the horrible hardships and sufferings under which so large a number of these unfortunate exiles sink on the way are a standing blot on the penal legislation of Russia.—Odessa Cor. London News.

A Question in Physiology.

Why the walls of the stomach and intestines are not themselves digested by their own fluids has for more than 100 years been a mooted question in physiology. Dr. John Hunter maintained that it was because these tissues were living, and other theories have been advanced, but none satisfactory. Dr. J. W. Warren, in a paper in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, gives the results of twenty experiments of his own made on fifty frogs. He suspended the legs of the frogs while living in an artificial gastric juice (that is, pepsin and hydrochloric acid) and found that the muscular tissue was digested, as shown by the presence of peptone, the frog remaining alive throughout the experiment. When acid was used without the pepsin the muscle was softened and dissolved, but not peptonized, and therefore not digested. It thus appears that living tissues may be digested, and the problem is still unsolved.—Boston Herald.

A 200-Year-Old Clock.

A curiosity in Mr. Wakefield's shop is a Dutch clock, 200 years old, which evidently has been a part of much interesting history. It is an ugly little block of a clock, seven or eight inches square, that is placed high enough on the wall to allow its weights to clear the floor, and is wound up by pulling a long dangling chain. It is a queer little wooden and brass clock, rudely made, with an uninteresting face. It looks more like a sleepy dunce of a clock than a smart, reliable timepiece. Nevertheless, it is a graduate of Bowdoin college. It told time to the students of that institution for many years. Opening one of the panels which form the sides of the old Dutchman and swing on wire hinges, one sees the inscription, "Edward Howe, Jr., Bowdoin college, 1838." Below it are the names "Josiah Howe" and "Dr. Sutherland, Bowdoin, 1849."—Lewiston Journal.

Stupid Children at School.

One of the best business men we know was a dreadfully stupid boy in numbers; one of the best writers could not spell "which" without a "t;" one of the best orators was a wretched reader in his first school year; one of the best teachers was mischievous almost to viciousness. Discordant notes in childhood do not necessarily mean lack of harmony or success in life.—Boston Journal of Education.

A Test for Gold.

A simple test for gold is as follows: Take a piece of flint and rub against it the metallic object to be tested until the latter leaves a sufficiently marked trace upon the stone. Upon bringing the flame of a sulphur match in contact with the spot the latter will remain intact if it has been made with gold, but will disappear if the contrary be the case.—Boston Herald.

WOMAN'S CROWNING GLORY.

Olive Logan Says American Women Do Not Take Care of Their Hair.

Wandering upon a time through the outskirting fields of a small provincial town in England, I came upon one of those interesting exhibitions of the kind which no doubt have been seen in Britain since the middle ages. A caravan of wild beasts in charge of a family of mountebanks had been brought to a halt, and, picturesquely grouped upon the greensward in front of the temporary stage which had been erected the preceding night, were to be seen all the gaping mouthed yokels of the village, eager to view the many marvels promised on payment of a silver sixpence. Among the wonders I found an announcement of "the display of her great natural curiosity, by Miss Sigismunda Montmorency, aged 16" I fancied that the girl might be one of those strange vocalists whose voices seem compounded from the masculine and feminine range, but when the rosy cheeked lass appeared it came out that her great curiosity was her hair, which fell upon the floor and dragged like a court mantle when she walked.

There is a reaction in favor of hair. For several years its glories have been clouded, but of late there has been a manifest desire to possess a luxuriant crown of capillary treasure. Biblical eulogy is not lacking anent the surpassing splendor of woman's hair, while as for that of men, abundant hair has from the time of the ancients been considered the attribute of divinity. What painter, what sculptor of old has ever represented Jupiter, Apollo or Neptune without a glorious quantity of beautiful hair. Phidias said that his statue of Jupiter Olympus was inspired by Homer, whose pages are full of apostrophes to the splendor of the hair of his heroes. Virgil, to express the power of a mythologic god, said that the shaking of his hair caused all Olympus to tremble. Coming down to modern days, who can forget the poetic assertion that beauty draws us by a single hair?

American families in general have fine hair. It grows abundantly, like other vegetables, under these favoring skies. But they do not take altogether good care of it. The hair needs a great deal of ventilation. It should be brushed and separated by a wide toothed comb morning and evening. It should be allowed to hang down untrammeled by combs, pins or strings when one is in dishabille, but no married woman should ever appear in company with dishevelled hair. A few years ago this frantic mode prevailed among women of poor taste and limited reading. The flowing hair is the mark of a virgin, in all pictorial art, and is so mentioned by Horace Walpole in the history of painting, published more than 100 years ago. Queen Victoria will not permit a married woman whose hair is flying about her shoulders to approach her presence; but the little Wales and Edinburgh girls—her grandchildren—wear their golden locks unfettered by the snood.

In spite of the dictum of interested hair-sellers and hairdressers, nothing is so beautiful and becoming to a woman as luxuriant natural hair, simply twined about the head, while a truant love lock here and there escapes from bondage and falls in curves of beauty on the brows.—Olive Logan in New York Mail and Express.

STANLEY AS A REPORTER.

An Old Newspaper Man Gives Some Reminiscences of the Great Explorer.

A gentleman who served on the local staff of a Western paper with Henry M. Stanley, before the now celebrated explorer had started on his search for Livingston, tells some very interesting stories of the friend of the King of the Belgians. "I met Stanley the last time he was in New York," said this gentleman, "and was greatly surprised to see that he still retains the appearance of a young man. In fact, he did not appear a day older than he was when he left Omaha nearly twenty years ago. When I made a close examination, however, this phenomenon was accounted for. He is, I found, a liberal patron of hair dyes, and he is 'made up' as much as any actor on the stage. Henry was always great on 'make-up.' It was his great ability in making something out of nothing that brought him into discredit in Omaha when the first report of his successful search for Livingstone was sent across the water."

"To what do you refer?"

"Stanley and I were local reporters together in one of the frontier towns when the Pike's Peak excitement was at its height. Stanley was also the correspondent of several Eastern papers. It was supposed that we, on the extreme edge of civilization, had extensive facilities for collecting advance news from the seat of the excitement, and Stanley was not the boy to let the chance to make a dollar slip, because real news was scarce. His correspondence to his Eastern connections was filled with the most glowing and blood-curdling accounts of the trials and tribulations of the men whose shibboleth was 'Pike's Peak or Bust.' Not a day passed that he did not grind out a column of horrors. One day a thrilling account of an Indian massacre would startle the good people of Boston, New York or Philadelphia. The next morning he would tell of an outbreak of the lawless element in which there would be fifteen or twenty killed. Then would follow a story of the wonderful discovery of a fabulous sum of gold by a party of prospectors. All these stories would be made more realistic by the names of the killed and wounded and the exact hour in the day when each event occurred. In fact, they bore every indication of profound truth, and they were doubtless believed by those who read them. Each story ostensibly came from the mouth of some disgusted miner who had started on his return to his home in the East. They were in fact perfect works of fiction and did great credit to Stanley's imagination."

"Then the people of Omaha do not take much stock in the reports of his successful trip into the interior of Africa this time?"

"O, I don't know much about the feeling towards Stanley there now. A new population has grown up in the West since he resided among us, and those who live in Omaha now are not acquainted with him."

"Has he ever been to visit the scenes of his early triumphs since the discovery of Livingstone?"

"Yes, he was there soon after his first return to America. About the first thing he said was in the nature of abuse for the incredulity with which the people of Omaha had received the reports of his trip to Ujiji. I reminded him of the Pike's Peak stories, and he seemed to be satisfied."—Washington Cor. Boston Post.

HE WALKED AWAY.

How a Pumped-Out Humorist Was Insulted in a Railroad Office.

The door opened with that lengthened screak which bespeaks extreme carefulness on the part of the one who is entering, and a tall, thin man stood in the presence of the superintendent of the great Continental Air Line.

"Well, sir," said the superintendent.

The visitor bowed profoundly, and said:

"It is not in a spirit of haughtiness that I come to you. I make no pretensions, advance no claims to recognition, but simply submit my case."

"I don't understand you," said the superintendent.

"It will not take me long, sir, to explain myself. I am a pumped out humorist."

"Ah?"

"I am inclined to think, sir, that it is ah!"

"What is your name?" the superintendent kindly asked.

"Napoleon T. B. Backlefield."

"And you were a humorist?"

"Yes, sir."

"I have never heard of you."

"Ah my dear sir, there is many a humorist who is pumped out before anybody hears of him. Mark Twain spoke recently of endowing a home for me and my exhausted contemporaries, but as usual he seems to be taking his own time."

"What do you want me to do?"

"Give me a pass. Remember that I do not come haughtily."

"Have you heard of the—"

"Yes, I know all about the Inter-State Commerce imposition."

"Then you know that we can not give passes except to employes."

"Yes, but you can say that I am an employe."

"But none only those who are on the regular pay roll are to be recognized as employes."

"Please do not let that stand in your way. Put me on the pay roll."

"It would still be a violation of the law, unless we actually paid you money."

"Well, then, pay me money."

The superintendent bestowed a searching look upon him. "I feel sorry for you," said he, "and perhaps may give you employment. Are you good in mathematics?"

"I fear not, sir. The ninth line of the multiplication table is my mortal enemy."

"Can you measure cord wood?"

"No, I fear not."

"Mark cross ties?"

"I am not artist enough."

"You say that you are a pumped-out humorist?"

"Don't I look like one?"

"I suppose you do. Let me see," he said, musingly, "if there is not something I can give you to do. Can you curry a horse?"

"No, sir."

"Let me see. Pumped-out humorist." The superintendent mused for a moment, then springing to his feet, he threw his arms around the visitor. "Thank Heaven that you have come!" he exclaimed. "I can give you employment at an enormous salary. I want you to answer the funny letters the editors write when they return their passes."

The pumped-out humorist disengaged himself from the superintendent's embrace, shoved him back with an ungentle hand, cast a look of deep reproach upon him, and without speaking, slowly walked away.—Arkansaw Traveler.

—"Have you 'Hours of Idleness' here?" the maiden asked, as she sauntered into the second-hand book store. "No, we haven't miss," said the youth behind the counter. "The boss is an old skinflint, and when we ain't doing any business he keeps us dusting the books."—Boston Courier.

TROUBLE AHEAD.

When the appetite fails, and sleep grows restless and unrefreshing, there is trouble ahead. The digestive organs, when healthy, crave food, the nervous system, when vigorous and tranquil, gives its possessor no uneasiness at night. A tonic, to be effective, should not be a mere appetizer, nor are the nerves to be strengthened and soothed by the unaided action of a sedative or a narcotic. What is required is a medicine which invigorates the stomach, and promotes assimilation of food by the system, by which means the nervous system, as well as other parts of the physical organism, are strengthened. These are the effects of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine whose reputation is founded firmly in public confidence, and which physicians commend for its tonic, anti-bilious and other properties. It is used with the best reeults in fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney and uterine weakness, and other maladies.

It is estimated that the common law contains no less than 2,000,000 rules, each independent of each other, scattered through judicial reports in England and America.

THINGS WORTH KNOWING.

That dyspepsia comes from torpid liver and costiveness.

That you cannot digest your food well unless your bowels and liver act properly.

That your bowels require thorough cleansing when they do not do their duty by your digestion.

That your torpid liver needs stimulating in order that it may act as nature intended it should.

That BRANDRETH'S PILLS taken in doses of one or two at night for, say, ten days, will regulate the bowels, stimulate the liver, improve the digestion and drive away dyspepsia.

HOW TO GET STRONG.

Dumb bells and horizontal bars, Indian clubs and the trapeze are valuable under certain conditions, but they are detrimental rather that beneficial if the blood is poor and thin and poisoned with bile. Use of the muscles necessitates waste as well as induces growth. If the blood does not carry sufficient nutritive material to repair the waste, loss of strength necessarily follows, and growth is out of the question. Purify and enrich your blood with Dr. Pierce' "Golden Medical Discovery" and then exercise will develop and not consume your physique.

GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY

CURES ALL HUMORS, from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Rose Rash, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, White Swellings, Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE." Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, and vital strength, will be established.

CONSUMPTION, which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken before the last stages of the disease are reached. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now celebrated remedy to the public, Dr. PIERCE thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too limited for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have sallow color of skin, or yellowish-brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills, alternating with hot flushes, low spirits and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and coated tongue, you are suffering from Indigestion, Dyspepsia, and Torpid Liver, or "Biliousness." In many cases only part of these symptoms are experienced. As a remedy for all such cases, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is unsurpassed.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS, at $1.00, or SIX BOTTLES for $5.00.

THE TRAVELER'S TREE.

How Its Various Parts Are Utilized by the Natives of Madagascar.

A European traveler, on his way from the coast of Madagascar to the capital, Tananarivo, in the interior, had emptied his water-flask, and was suffering from thirst. He asked one of the natives of his party when he should be able to obtain water: "Any time you like," said the native, smiling. The European saw no sign of spring or water; but the natives conducted him to a group of tall, palm-like trees standing in a cluster on the edge of the forest, with straight trunks and bright green, broad leaves, growing from the opposite sides of the stalk, and making the tree appear like a great fan. The white man gazed admirably at the tree. "You think it is a fine tree," said the native, "but I will show you what it is good for."

He pierced the root of one of the leaf stems, at the point where it joined the tree, with his spear, whereupon a stream of clear water spurted out, which the European caught in his water-can, and found cool, fresh and excellent to drink. The party having satisfied their thirst and taken a supply, the native who had spoken went on:

"This tree, which is good for us in more ways than one, we call the traveler's tree."

"But where does the water come from that the tree contains?" asked the white man. "Is it taken up from the soil?"

"Oh, no," said the native. "The leaves drink in the rain that falls on them, and when it has passed all through them, it becomes very pure and sweet."

"Are there many of these trees on the island?"

"There are so many that sometimes one sees no other trees for a mile; and very often we take no provision of water when we travel, because we know that we shall find the traveler's tree."

"And you say there are other things that they are good for?"

The native answered by asking another question.

"Do you remember," he said, "the village that we passed through this morning, with its wooden huts roofed over with leaves? Those huts were made of nothing but the traveler's tree. The wood splits easily, but makes tough planks for floors, and the walls of the houses are made of the bark.

"With the branches we make the rafter, and the leaves cover the roof. But this is not all that the good tree does. We are coming soon to a village whose people I know, and I will show you more."

The native was eager in his haste to show to the traveler what the tree still had in store for him, and the European for his part, felt no little curiosity. They arrived soon at the village, and the guide conducted the traveler to the hut of a friend, who received them very hospitably, and soon spread a meal for them. First he placed upon a sort of table a spread made of some vegetable substance, very light and pretty, then he set before his guests two drinking vessels of a material which the white man did not recognize; and then he gave them two utensils, which, although rude in shape, served in the stead of knife and fork. In the midst of the table he placed a large bowl filled with cream of very appetizing appearance. In another vessel there was a quantity of oil, with almonds floating upon it.

"Before we begin," said the guide, "I must tell you what I promised. Every thing that there is upon this table comes from the traveler's tree. You see this table-cloth? It is made of the fibers of the leaves of the tree. These drinking cups, these plates, these knives, are made of the wood or the bark of the tree. What you take to be cream is a dish made of the seeds of the tree, pounded up with meal, and mixed with a kind of milk drawn from the trunk of the tree. What you think are almonds are little cakes made of these seeds, and the oil is pressed from the skin or shuck of the seed. As for the water you are about to drink, you know that already. And we get not only these things, but some of the people of Madagascar have made a kind of cloth that they wear out of the fiber of the wood."—Youth's Companion.

The Queen as a Girl.

Fifty years ago we had the Queen, a dainty little maiden, only four feet ten inches in height, with a delicate figure, a flower-like face, a slender arm and exquisitely poised head. The face was a little pensive, but nevertheless mirthful, the corners of the mouth turning up as decidedly as they now turn down; the tendency of the upper lip was to curl, allowing a mere suggestion of white teeth to appear. A simple gown of soft white India muslin, bound round the small waist with satin ribbon and embroidered with field daisies, strings of pearls wound round the white throat, and tapering arms left modestly bare complete the picture of the youthful niece of George IV. And now the enemy of womankind has stolen a triumphant march upon Victoria. But one thing neither time nor flesh has deprived the Queen of, and that is the really regal bearing, the erect figure, the uplifted head and firm tread which in her triumphal entry into Westminster Abbey fifty years ago led the beholders to declare that she was a tall woman.—London Letter.

FATHERLY BILL NYE.

His Capacity as a Will-Maker Evinced by Some Remarkable Legacies.

Mr. Bill Nye is responsible for the following fond, paternal epistle. It will be noted that he sets a shining example to other men of means by submitting in advance an outline of his proposed will for the consideration of his heirs:

MY DEAR HENRY: This is a dictated letter. The thoughts are mine but the penmanship is that of a man named Beasley, who is doing the chores for us this winter. My reason for hiring a private secretary is that last Tuesday the strawberry blonde Shote slumped through a hole in the ice, and in striving to rescue him from a watery grave I fell and broke one of my legs, just above the fetlock.

Kind friends came from everywhere to ask me if it hurt much, and in a thousand different ways showed their gentle desire to draw me into a spirited conversation. A doctor came down from the Insanitarium to set the leg, and tied his horse to a little sugar maple tree that I set out last spring. When he puts in his bill for medical attendance he will be surprised to find an offset of eighty cents for that tree. I may be slightly crippled, but you can announce in your valuable paper that there are no flies on me to speak of.

While spread out here with nothing to do my mind has been quite active, and I have had drawn off for me the following outlines of a will, which I send you inclosed herewith. "Please read and return," as it says on the Bible rack on board the cars:

Know all men by these presents, that I, the subscriber, being of a sound mind and realizing that I am now under the doctor's care, and therefore may be swept into eternity at any moment, do hereby make, execute and publish this my last will and testament firmly by these presents:

First—I hereby appoint my beloved wife Henrietta to be my sole executrix, assignee and receiver of my entire estate, with full powers to pay taxes on said estate forever, and to have and to hold the same so long as grass grows and water runs, together with such other and further relief as the court may adjudge.

Second—I hereby request that the red horse Napoleon be sold and the proceeds thereof used towards defraying my funeral expenses provided that the sum of twenty-five dollars therefrom be set aside for the purpose of maintaining a large, aggressive bull-dog, whose duty it shall be to monkey o'er my lowly grave until my dust shall be of no use to science. It is my desire that my executrix shall so maintain said bull-dog hereinbefore set forth in order that pimply young medical students may not make too free with all that is mortal of a superior man. It is my special desire that no part of my economy shall contribute in any way to science or to the amusement of a class of sore-eyed goslings, who can not get near enough to a live man to operate on him.

I desire to state, also, that I hope whatever may be odd or eccentric or abnormal about my formation may be generously allowed to pull oblivion over itself and fade away. I do not wish to be perpetuated in the form of a fatty tumor or osseous formation. Let my good deeds be my only monument. Let the post-mortem in my case be omitted and the time taken up in some other way.

I request also that at my funeral the free-list be suspended, and that those only who have a personal interest in the proceedings be permitted to take part. Persons who make the funeral industry a business or rely upon it as a means of relaxation are requested to abstain from my funeral as a personal favor to me.

I give and bequeath, make over and present to my beloved wife Henriette, all and singular, my real and personal property aside from said horse Napoleon, heretofore enumerated and set aside for funeral purposes, to have and to hold all said property during her lifetime, and after that the said real and personal property to pass to my beloved son, Henry, who is engaged in publishing a paper at two dollars per year. To said beloved son Henry I also bequeath all my wardrobe. I have worn out his old lawn-tennis and polo clothes while he was attending college, using his boating and base-ball suits for underclothing during the winter, and now that I am about to pass on I leave my own clothing to him as a slight testimonial of my appreciation for his kindness to me when I had no polo suit of my own. I also direct that an obituary, consisting of forty lines, relative to me, be printed in my son's paper, cod6t, at ten cents per line; to follow pure reading matter, for which the sum of twenty-four dollars will be found in an old sock in my escritoire in the barn. I do not care for the obituary, but desire to aid a panting, struggling enterprise.

It is also my desire that all my debts contracted during life be paid up after my death. My object in dying is not in any way to evade the payment of my debts.

I may add to this will from time to time, as anything good suggests itself. In the meantime let me hear from you ever and anon. Tell us how you come on with your new paper and whether you have contributed any more of your thumbs to your new job press or not.—Bill Nye, in N. Y. World.

—What will the thrifty housekeeper do when broom-corn gives out? There are said to be signs of its failure in localities where it was once a leading crop. Thus it is noted as a curious fact that a Massachusetts man recently sent to Illinois for one hundred tons of broom-corn for use in the once famous broom corn-growing Hadley meadows.—N. Y. Examiner.

NEW USE FOR DOGS.

How a Doctor Experimented for the Benefit of Generous Employers.

Some individuals value dogs as pets, friends and companions; some maintain them as guardians of life and property; others as useful auxiliaries in the field: in some parts of Europe dogs are used as draught animals and beasts of burden; certain Indian tribes eat dogs; among some savage nations the dog is worshipped; in other lands dogs are looked upon as materialized souls of the departed; the Supreme Court of the State of Maine holds that dogs are wild beasts, fera naturæ, and as such may be lawfully made war upon and exterminated; city dog catchers regard dogs as the legitimate plunder of highway robbery at thirty cents apiece; and the pound man reckons up their value when after drowning they are sold to the offal gatherers; fashionable ladies wear small or large dogs, just as they assume or put away new styles of headgear; Dr. John Brown made use of a dog as the subject of a literary effort which—as such things go—is immortal; circus clowns train troups of trick dogs; blind men are led about by dogs to beg; some dogs are life preservers, rescuing human beings from watery graves; in Damascus dogs are protected as scavengers; in London dogs are cut up alive by vivisectionists; the "best dog in the world" is used chiefly for brag; and, again, in every part of the world there are dogs which are good for nothing save drowning in a bucket before ever their eyes open to give them a glimpse of the world.

A New Jersey doctor, Beriah A. Watson, has discovered a new use for this creature. He had the genius to recognize in the dog an animal possessing a spine, which might, by a proper device of a devilish trap, be broken for experimental purposes. The doctor is an "expert" employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in accident damage suits. An expert is a man who is employed to go on the witness stand and swear to the best of his knowledge, belief, medical skill and conscience in defense of the side which retains him. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has been annoyed by suits brought against it by persons who claim to have received spinal injuries in railroad accidents. The Jersey City doctor, being employed to give his professional aid and comfort to the railroad as defendant in such suits, conceived the brilliant notion that by subjecting a few hundred dogs to prolonged torture he might gain some data that could be worked to the pecuniary advantage of his employers. By carefully noting the death in life of a sufficient number of brutes whose spines has been broken in his trap, and making detailed memoranda of the successive stages of their agony, he hoped to save the Pennsylvania corporation the few hundred or thousand of dollars it might otherwise be compelled to disburse, and thus conscientiously earn his wages as its servant.

The doctor at once became a dog fancier. He developed a great taste for dogs. He liked them—that is, he liked to break their backs in his trap, and then study them as they staggered at out or fell down and died. Forty-one dogs, gathered up by newsboys, had been led into the doctor's barn and put through the trap, and their living and dying duly recorded, without any thing of material benefit to the railroad "expert," when the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals stepped in and put an end to the abomination. There is every prospect that the doctor will be denied any further watching of broken-backed dogs. If he longs for new scientific fields to conquer, there is an opening up on the Northwest coast. The Kootenai Indians, of British Columbia, have a cheerful custom of carrying the helpless old people of the tribe to remote localities and there abandoning them to die. Science might profit by a minute and faithful record of the successive stages of the subject's symptoms, as observed by a dispassionate and coldly professional student. The savages, probably, would not interfere, and the doctor, baulked of fame and fortune from his investigation of broken-spined dogs, would have the field of lingering Kootenai dissolution all to himself.—Brooklyn Eagle.

HELEN JACKSON.

Her Boundless and Genuine Admiration for Physical Perfection.

No one loved beauty more than she; no one could depreciate the body more when it began to lose its freshness. For strong young men in their prime, for blooming girls and mature womanhood, she had an admiration as frank and almost as unqualified as a Greek's. But her very adoration of physical loveliness made her peculiarly sensitive to imperfection and the dismal accompaniments of sickness. In her own case, when accident brought infirmity upon her, it was received at first with a shudder of disgust, a kind of quick impulsive scorn, of which, perhaps, only noble natures are capable. She spoke of her illness as "a career of disgrace." It was not, probably, for the loss of creature comforts, nor even the long train of afflictions which it entailed; these she could endure; they proved, in fact, a field for the exercise of a fortitude which was little short of heroic. Health meant liberty, its loss an endless series of restrictions affecting her activity and the free play of her intelligence. She resented them as something outside of herself, which deserved only contempt and chastising. Her soul, she thought, could lift itself above them—was above them. Throughout her sufferings, she kept her sunniness of spirit, her serenity and elasticity. And she continued to work, and to think of work. This, indeed, was an integral part of her creed. To idlers and dilettanti she had always turned a cold shoulder; they had no place in her scheme of things. If her antipathy assumed at times a humorous form, it was none the less real and deep-seated. It would have gratified the most rigid economist to have heard her set forth this thesis of life as a period of active production. She rejoiced to call herself, and be called, a working woman; there was no better title under heaven to her sense, and her life was a long enforcement of the belief, a fruitful illustration of how it could be practiced with dignity and success.—Princeton Review.

"Civilities of the Sarvice."

A citizen of Bourbon proclivities strolled into the postoffice this morning with both hands in his pockets and a short pipe between his teeth, walked up and down the corridors, looked over the building as if he had just bought it, and remarked to a friend, "Begorra we've a Dimmycrat for postmasther." When he caught sight of two colored letter carriers going out with their mail he rushed excitedly to the postmaster's private office and demanded:

"An' is it here Con is?"

"Meaning Mr. Gallagher?" inquired a clerk.

"It is that same mon that I mane."

"Yes, sir, but he's out."

"Wud the loike av yees tell me isn't he posthmasther?"

"He is."

Just then a friend of the excited citizen entered and the latter caught his arm and exclaimed:

"Wud ye belave it, Jerry! Con's running the office wid nagurs!"

"Whist a bit till I tell yees."

"An' haven't I seen thim wid me own eyes?"

"Kape the clothes on ye, till I tell yees. Thim Bohaymian letther carriers is naded for raydin' Boyhamian letthers an' thim Swades for raydin' Swadish an' thim naygurs av coorse for raydin' naygur. "Tall Aches from Little Toe Corns Grow."

Did you ever reflect that the corn is an index of refinement and enlightenment? You may seek for it in vain in the miserable habitations of the native of Terra del Fuego or the bushman of Australia, but in the gilded homes of statesmen and men of letters you will find them by the score. Gaze upon the generous feet of the king of the Cannibal Islands, who never had a corn in his life—unless it was appended to a roasted missionary—and then search the embossed pedal extremities of Mr. Gladstone, or Lord Tennyson, or Lily Langtry, and you will realize that it is not the shriek of the locomotive or the gaudy uniform of the somnolent telegraph messenger, but the humble and unassuming corn that speaks loudest of the onward stride of civilization.—Sedalia Bazoo.

Political Boss—You are a renegade, sir. You promised me you'd vote against women's suffrage, but when the bill came up you voted for it. I've a great mind to thrash you.

Legislator—I've a great mind to thrash you, sir. You took an oath to me that you would use all your influence to get the other members to vote against it, and when the time came you just sat in the gallery and didn't do a thing.

"Well, but my wife was there."

"So was mine."

A Case of Mistaken Identity.

Wide Awake Officer—I've got you now! Ain't you the galoot that's been beatin' the Bon Ton restaurant out of those $5 table d'hote dinners!

Odd Errors of Speech.

The correspondent of a weekly contemporary supplies a few more genuine instances of Malapropisms. Thus, we hear of cholera morbus being turned into "mollery corbus," and of a local "light" bidding some one beware of "inundations" in religion. Amusing, too, is the unintentional perversion of a well known line—"From Iceland's greasy mountains." A villager, asked if Mr. M. lived in a certain house, replied, "Yes, he lives there, but he is dead." But that is rather an Irishism than a Malaprop.—London Globe.

Sure Enough, That Explains.

Pompana—There is more in psychology than you think of, Bagley. Let me relate a queer case. Thirty-four years ago my friend Biged was shot in the side while fighting Indians and with each recurring of that day, that very minute of the hour, he feels the twinge of the bullet and at no other time. Now, can you account for that?

Bagley—Very easily.

"Indeed! How?"

"Your friend is a liar!"—Philadelphia Call.

In a Strange Garret.

St. Peter—I will attend to your case presently. Just take a seat there and watch the people pass in.

Omaha Political Editor—There comes a man I used to know, now. He was a Prohibitionist. You don't let such fellows in, do you?

"Certainly; he is welcome."

"But he didn't belong to the Knights of Labor, either."

"That don't matter."

"Well, this is a queer place."—Omaha World.

Boston Culture.

If knowledge you would glean,
Why just take a pot of beans,
With a little pork and brown bread on a platter;
Then an eyeglass in you fling,
Add a book by Bob Brown-ing,
And lecture then on inorganic matter.
Then stir in some Emer-son,
And a philosophic pun—
Keep your eye upon the mixture like a vulture—
Season with a hot debate
On the soul—its future state—
And you have the recipe for Boston culture.

THE TOMB OF JULIET.

The Ill-Fated Maiden's Apocryphal Resting Place at Verona, Italy.

My first stroll through the town was in search of the supposed tomb of Juliet. Shakespeare's drama it was which naturally suggested to me such an idea. The story of the ill-fated lovers had made such an impression on my mind that it was with a veritable enthusiasm I sauntered out in order to pay my devotions to the mortal remains of her who, in the hands of England's greatest dramatist, contributed as much to idealize the sweetest and tenderest of human passions. On my way to the tomb, however, all my fervor evaporated after half an hour's conversation with several ancient antiquarians, with one of whom I happened to be on intimate terms during my residence in Milan, having been informed by them that the tomb in question was a rank imposture; that if ever there existed such a person as Juliet, there is not the slightest shadow of proof for supposing that her ashes are in Verona; and finally, that the whole story of her burial in that town was invented by a set of tradesmen and hotel proprietors, eager to catch and fleece unsuspecting or credulous tourists. My feelings at being thus rudely woken out of my cherished illusions can be better imagined than described. However, as it was not by any means the first of my Spanish castles that toppled over into the nether abyss just as I found myself in the act of admiring its stately grandeur and fine proportions, I soon managed to put up patiently with the inevitable and resolved to see at any cost this apocryphal dwelling of the dead. After a half hour's promenade through noisome lanes and alleys, I happened at last on a gateway some twelve feet high, on the summit of which were written the following words in large rough characters: "Tomba di Giulietta." The iron door stood ajar, and I entered an inclosure of half a square acre, overgrown with weeds and dog nettles, that seemed to me to have been at one time a garden. And I was subsequently informed that the roses bloomed here and the marigold and hyacinth kept watch and ward over the solitary tomb hard by. If Juliet had been really buried here, when the flowers were in blossom and the trees had their wealth of frondage and the zephyrs thrummed their melodies through the overhanging foliage, her last resting place would have been certainly in thorough harmony with her character and temperament; but at present there is no scene so incongruous as this black barren wilderness—no casket so utterly unworthy of its gem. A group of artisans out for a holiday were playing at skittles within a stone's throw of the tomb, and their oaths, curses and other ejaculations were quite the reverse of poetical. The tomb lies in a kind of an outhouse, and presents a decidedly antique appearance. It is somewhat in the shape of an open mausoleum, the sides of which are rather irregular, owing, I was told, to the chips stolen from the block by enthusiastic tourists. Around the mausoleum stand broken pillars and roughly hewn pedestals, while on the wall to the left, as you enter, hangs a very old painting of Friar Lawrence. The stones here and here are covered all over with autographs of Europeans. Americans and English, prominent among the latter being that of a certain Edward Shakespeare, a gentleman who, according to the well-informed porter, was a very near relative of a very great poet who was a very near relative of Romeo's betrothed.—Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

The Roaring of an Alligator.

Probably few persons have ever heard of "the roaring of an alligator." "I heard it myself," says Mr. Simson, "on one occasion in the case of a huge beast who appeared to be following a female of his species." The animal was swimming very rapidly, diving and rebounding up to the surface of the water. Mr. Simson was in a small Rob Roy canoe, and remained still to watch his manœuvers. Immediately the alligator saw the canoe, he "came towards it, roaring like a bull at each bound above the water." As he was diving, Mr. Simson (who was unarmed) forced the canoe straight over him, and so escaped. "Curiously enough," he writes, "not half an hour after this episode, an alligator jumped from a steep bank over my canoe, and only just cleared it, as I was distractedly paddling along under the shore, and inadvertantly startled the reptile above me."—Travels in Equador.

An Incurable Habit.

How is it that when a friend of yours shows you a new watch you invariably open the cases and examine the works critically, remarking that it's a "dandy," and that the "works are very fine?" What in the world do you know about the works of a watch, anyway? You only make the owner of the watch nervous when you look at them, you don't care a snap about seeing them, and everybody knows that you don't. But the next new watch you see you'll go jabbing away at it in the same way, just as though you hadn't read this, until you tear half your thumbnail off and then borrow a knife to open it. I would advise a man with a new and valuable watch to have the case covering the works hermetically sealed.—Chicago Journal.

—English school-board education continues to yield curious results. The latest is this: In answer to the question put by the diocean inspector: "Describe some of the effects of the proceedings under Queen Mary," the glib answer was reeled off: "Many of the Bishops were deprived of their sees." One of the managers, however, cross-examined the children on the above answer, and asked the meaning of the statement. After a long pause one boy put up his hand and said: "Had their eyes put out!"

—The New York Examiner discusses the preaching of the day and the duty of preachers in the premises. It says: "The great need of the time is fresh, interesting preaching. The American pulpit, as a whole, is respectable in scholarship, sufficiently sound in theology and fairly trained in the art of oratory. But it would be greatly the gainer if the old truths were enforced from newer points of view, if the treatment of texts were less mechanical, if the style were less conventional, if the range of topics was as full of variety as the Scriptures themselves—if, in a word, it were more interesting."

SAVED FROM DISASTER.

Eminent Persons Who Have Been Preserved by a Protecting Providence.

It will not be difficult to mention cases in which eminent individuals have been preserved from danger and death by the manifest hand of Providence.

John Knox, the Scotch reformer, had many enemies, who sought to compass his destruction. He was in the habit of sitting in a particular chair in his own house, with his back to the window. One evening, however, when assembling his family, he would neither occupy his accustomed seat nor allow any body else to do so. That very evening a bullet was sent through the window with a design to kill him. It grazed the chair which he usually occupied, and made a hole in the candlestick.

It is related of Augustine that he was going on one occasion to preach at a distart town, and took a guide to direct him on the way. By some means the guide mistook his way, and got into a by-path. It was afterward learned that a party of miscreants had designed to waylay and murder him, and that his life was saved through the guide's mistake.

Charles of Bala was once saved from death by what some would call a foolish mistake. On one of his journeys to Liverpool his saddle-bag was put into the wrong boat. He had taken his seat when he discovered it, and had to change at the last minute. At first he was vexed and disappointed, but he afterward learned that the boat in which he intended to go was lost, and all its passengers drowned.

Howard, the philanthropist, was once preserved from death by what some would call mere chance, but which was no other than a special providence. He always set a high value on Sabbath privileges, and was exact and careful in his attendance on the means of grace. That he might neither increase the labor of his servants nor prevent their attendance on public worship, he was accustomed to walk to the chapel at Bedford, where he attended. One day a man whom he had reproved for his idle and dissolute habits resolved to waylay and murder him. That morning, however, for some reason or other, he resolved to go on horseback, and by a different road. Thus his valuable life was preserved.

Rev. John Newton was in the habit of regarding the hand of God in every thing, however trivial it might appear to others. "The way of man is not in himself," he would say. "I do not know what belongs to a single step. When I go to St. Mary Woolnoth, it seems the same whether I go down Lothberry, or go through the Old Jewry; but the going through one street and not another may produce an effect of lasting consequence. A man cut down my hammock in sport, but had he cut it down half an hour later I had not been here, as the exchange of the crew was then making. A man made a smoke on the seashore at the time a ship was passing, which was thereby brought to, and afterward brought me to England."—The Quiver.

AIR IN THE CHEST.

Instructive Information Concerning Various Affections of the Lungs.

The lungs lie against the chest walls. When the chest expands, fresh air rushes into the lungs, and, expanding them also, still keeps them in closest contact with the chest. A thin, lubricating fluid, secreted by the membrane which lines the chest cavity, prevents all friction from the constant motion of the two on each other. Sometimes this membrane, becoming inflamed, secretes in large quantities a watery fluid, which sometimes changes to pus. This secretion, crowding against the lungs; interferes with their proper expansion. This is pleurisy.

Sometimes the space becomes filled with air, which presses against the lungs and impedes their action. This is pneumothorax, which means simply air in the chest. The air is from the lungs. It may issue from them through some minute opening in their walls, an aperture, perhaps, not larger than a pin-hole, made by the bursting of a small vesicle near their surface. The bursting may be caused by unusual exertion, or by the softening of the vesicle, as a pimple or boil softens and breaks. The opening once made, the air is constantly forced through by every expiration. The accumulated air, compressing the lungs, may cause the opening to close and heal up, in which case the air is gradually absorbed. Sometimes a bit of matter, as a blood-clot, is swept into the lungs, where it lodges in a minute artery near the surface, and then causing inflammation and suppuration, opens out an exit for the air.

In all cases the difficulty is that the lungs can not properly expand, and the patient's breathing is interfered with—sometimes fatally. Often it is relieved without medical aid; often, again, only by tapping; in some cases the tapping needs to be repeated. The relief is immediate. The air rushes out with great force from the elasticity of the lungs and the distended chest. If, however, the tapping in severe cases is delayed too long, the collapsed lungs lose their elasticity, and fail to expand.—Youth's Companion.

The old building is in a very good state of preservation, but it looks as though it might be one hundred years old, so weather-beaten are its walls and roof.—Chicago Herald.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

County Official Paper.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

SATURDAY JULY 16 ..... 1887.

MISCELALNEOUS.

Some good ore has recently been found over the Inyo range, in the Waucoba district.

A new orchestra of eight members has been organized at Independence. Mr. Ford is leader.

Mrs. Samuels ended her visit to her mother, Mrs. Lewis, and left for San Francisco last Tuesday morning.

The work of the Board of Equalization has been very thorough. The increase in assessments will aggregate a large amount.

Wine makers in Napa county have but recently learned of the superior excellence of the grapes that can be grown and the wine that can be made in Owens valley, and are taking much interest in the matter.

Steps are being taken to organize a Post of the G. A. R. at Independence. There are enough old vets around to make a strong Post.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at 8 p. m. on Sunday. Praise service at a quarter to 8. Sunday school at 11 a. m. Everybody made welcome.

Mr. W. Charles, of Chicago, is at Independence. Mr. Charles is a mining engineer and is examining mines in this vicinity in the interest of Chicago parties.

An entertainment will be gotten up for the benefit of the band. The programme will be of a varied character. The entertainment will be given the first week in August.

Joe Wells and Charley Williams, well known miners of Candelaria, are taking a vacation in Owens Valley. They spent a week at Independence and went on to Darwin this morning.

Land and real estate of all kinds is continually increasing in value in Owens Valley. Three years ago this kind of property could hardly be given away; now there are buyers for all that is offered.

Very little government land now remains to be located in Owens valley. Three years ago the old settlers thought the land was not worth taking up; men who knew better thought it was.

Mr. Kispert is bringing fine apples and peaches into market. He says his grape crop will be heavy and of better than average quality. Mr. Kispert never fails to have remarkably fine graps.

The increased valuation of property on the assessment roll made by the Board of Equalization, will aggregate some where near one hundred thousand dollars over the amount returned by the Assessor.

The bodies of the six men lost in the Gould & Curry mine were found last Sunday morning. Sixteen days were consumed in the search. The men had tried to escape through the old working but were overcome by foul gas and all died together.

Apricots are in excess of the home demand, yet there is not enough surplus to make shipping an object. If we raised twenty times as much as we now do there would be money in the business. The apricots grown are of fine quality and the trees bear well.

In the eastern mind it would appear that California is thought to be a part of Los Angeles. A few days ago a letter was recrived from the Rural New Yorker addressed to "Secretary, Inyo Co; Fair. Los Angeles." The Rural New Yorker would no doubt feel pity for the ignorance of Californians if some country editor should address a letter to the "Secretary Erie County Fair, Albany."

With railroad connection to Los Angeles Owens Valley would be a most popular summer resort. The grandeur of the mountain scenery; the beautiful lakes; the mountain streams full of trout; the bright sunshine and clear, invigorating atmosphere form such a combination of attractions as cannot be found anywhere else in the State. Once let the Eastern invalids realize what a fine climate is here and they could not be induced to go anywhere else.

Important Decision.

Last Monday a decision was given in the Superior Court on the demurer to amended complaint in the case of Broder, et. als, versus Conklin. The Court sustained the demurrer. This virtually ends the case in favor of the defendant, so far as the Superior Court is concerned. An appeal may be taken by the plaintiffs to the Supreme Court.

Another Piece of Desert.

This year Mr. Gustave Sanger, on his place at Alvord planted three hundred acres in wheat, oats and barley, alfalfa seed being put in with the grain. The grain will average one ton per acre; the wheat will go above this yield. The alfalfa has come up very thick among the grain. It is a safe estimate to make that this alfalfa will next year average five tons per acre. Mr. Sanger also planted a large number of shade and fruit trees and all are making rapid growth. The land is neither better nor worse than thousands of acres along Owens River.

Ranch for Sale.

At Black Rock, twelve miles north from Independence, 520 acres of land for sale. Black Rock is one of the very best parts of Owens Valley. Four hundred acres of this land is held under U. S. patent; the remainder is located under the timber culture Act. One hundred and eighty acres are enclosed by a fence of cedar posts and barb wire. Sixty acres are now under cultivation, mostly wheat, oats and barley. A large amount of hay can be cut; blue joint, red clover etc. Several large springs of pure water on the place and good water rights additional. House, outbuildings and corrals. C. & C. railroad half mile distant from east line of land. Owens river eighty rods distant. This is a fine place for an energetic man to improve and will be sold at a bargain. Apply to

SATURDAY, JULY 16.....1887.

SUPERVISORS' PROCEEDINGS.

On the above date the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county met at 10 o'clock a. m. to canvass the returns of a special election for an irrigation district.

Present Messrs. Harger, Eldred, Robinson and Eddy. Absent, Mr. Boland.

The returns being examined it was found that all the votes cast, with the exception of three votes in the Black Rock Division, were in favor of the district. The officers elected were as follows: Directors, C. B. Rawson, H. L. Clark, W. L. Hunter and A. C. Harvey. In the Second Division J. S. Gorman and S. A. Densmore were a tie; there being no choice the Supervisors will appoint to fill the vacancy at their next regular meeting. The Supervisors approved the result of the election and ordered the formation of the district.

Whereupon the Board adjourned as a Board of canvassers. J. D. HARGER, Chairman.

At 2 o'clock p. m. of the same day the Supervisors met as a Board of Equalization. Same members present.

Ordered that the assessment of R. L. Wimberly be cancelled, it being the same land assessed to George Davis.

Ordered that the assessment of Frank Shaw on 68 head of horses be raised from $700 to $1360.

Ordered that whenever there is reported a preponderance of calves over stock cattle the Clerk notify the parties to appear and show cause why two thirds of all their cattle should not be assessed as stock cattle $14 per head, less milch cows assessed at the schedule rate, and the balance as calves at $8 per head. And that Thursday, July 21st, is the time fixed for hearing said matter. Under the above rule the following parties were ordered to appear on the above date;

Ordered that John, William and Peter Meyers be notified to appear and show cause why the number of cattle for which they are respectively assessed, being 30, 31 and 24, should not be increased.

Ordered that William Barrows be ordered to appear and show cause why a certain mortgage held by him should not be assessed at its face value.

Ordered that Thomas Williams be notified to appear and show cause why the assessment on the improvements on his real estate should not be raised from $750 to $1750.

Whereupon the Board adjourned till Tuesday, July 12, 1887, at 9 a. m.

J. D. HARGER, Chairman.

TUESDAY, July 12, 1887.

The Board met at 9 a. m., all the members present.

Ordered that A. Spencer be notified to appear and show cause why his assessment of 50 tons of grain at $15 per ton should not be raised to $25 per ton.

Ordered that the Clerk notify the following named parties to appear and show cause why their respective assessments of horses and colts should not be raised as below specified.

ANALYZING THE BAKING POWDERS.

Under the direction of the New York State Board of Health, eighty-four different kinds of baking powders, embracing all the brands that could be found for sale in the State, were submitted to examination and analysis by Prof. C. F. CHANDLER, a Member of the State Board and President of the New York City Board of Health, assisted by Prof. EDWARD G. LOVE, the well-known United States Government chemist.

The official report shows that a large number of the powders examined were found to contain alum or lime; many of them to such an extent as to render them seriously objectionable for use in the preparation of human food.

Alum was found in twenty-nine samples. This drug is employed in baking powders to cheapen their cost. The presence of lime is attributed to the impure cream of tartar of commerce used in their manufacture. Such cream of tartar was also analysis, and found to contain lime and other impurities; in some samples to the extent of 93 per cent. of their entire weight.

All the baking powders of the market, with the single exception of "Royal" (not including the alum and phosphate powders, which were long since discarded as unsafe or inefficient by prudent housekeepers) are made from the impure cream of tartar of commerce, and consequently contain lime to a corresponding extent.

The only baking powder yet found by chemical analysis to be entirely free from lime and absolutely pure is the "Royal." This perfect purity results from the exclusive use of cream of tartar specially refined and prepared by patent processes which totally remove the tartrate of lime and other impurities. The cost of this chemically pure cream of tartar is much greater than any other, and on account of this greater cost is used in no baking powder but the "Royal."

Prof. LOVE, who made the analysis of baking powders for the New York State Board of Health, as well as for the Government, says of the purity and wholesomeness of the "Royal."

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates or any injurious substance.
E. G. LOVE, PH. D."

IRON CRYSTALLIZATION.

How it Produces Changes in the Fibers of the Metals and Weakens it.

Since a passenger train on the North British railway plunged from the great bridge over the Firth of Tay into the dark waters below, one stormy December night seven years ago, carrying every living soul upon it to certain death, there has been no railroad bridge disaster that has excited so much public attention as that which occurred on the Boston & Providence railroad at the Bussey bridge near Boston. In both the cause appears to have been a structural defect. This may also be said of the Ashtabula accident, whose horrors, however, were increased by the fierce work of flames and the inclemencies of a bitterly cold winter night.

Bridge accidents are considered by all railroad men as incomparably the worst to which travel by rail is exposed, and as among the most difficult to guard against absolutely. One source of danger was shown when the peculiar effects of a locomotive's hammer blows upon a track were explained. The theory was advanced that a girder of the bridge had broken beneath the engine's drivers, whose pounding upon the defectively constructed bridge was thus primarily the cause of the accident. This brings up a phase of railroad and bridge accidents which is at present receiving a great deal of attention. Crystallization in the material of iron bridges is an element of danger now so well recognized that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has adopted the definite policy of substituting stone for iron bridges, and the same plan is being followed by other railroad companies.

The lifetime of an iron bridge is from twenty to twenty-five years, and constant care is necessary to insure its safety. The Ashtabula bridge was thirteen years old, and at the time it fell beneath the weight of two engines and a heavy express train the theory was commonly advanced that crystallization had impaired its original strength. The two great moving causes of crystallization are vibration and the hammer blows of the locomotive, which gradually, by repeated impact, turn the fiber of iron or steel into a mass of crystals, needing only some unusual pressure or blow to cause them to break apart. Add to this the oscillation caused by the passage of trains at a high rate of speed, and it will be seen that an iron bridge is exposed to peculiar perils, which can only be guarded against by rigid inspection and constant renewals.

Crystallization was one of several theories advanced by Park Benjamin, a New York engineer, to account for the Tay bridge accident. He said:

"General indications go to show that the cause must be sought in an abnormal condition of the structure, or rather one which did not enter into the calculations of the builders. Such a condition would be the deterioration of the metal by its change from a fibrous to a crystaline state under repeated vibration. That this occurs in railway bridges has been vigorously disputed by many well-known engineers. On the other hand, many examples are quoted by different authorities to support the theory. Apropos to this particular accident, a distinguished French engineer and iron founder now in this country informs us that he has known bars of iron made by himself from Scotch pig to change from a tough fibrous to a brittle crystalline structure in traveling by rail only from the north of France to Paris. This is, of course, an extreme instance.

"Again, recent research has demonstrated that because a structure withstands a large quiescent load that fact is little proof of stability under repeated shocks and vibrations. Metals are believed to have a 'life.' A bar, for example, may stand a million vibrations and break down at the million and first, and yet the last shock may be lighter than preceding ones. Attempts, however, to reduce this law to practical application have elicited an abundance of conflicting evidence but, nevertheless, it is well settled that in no department of mechanics is an extended course of actual experimenting more urgently needed or of graver public importance."

The strength of the Tay bridge at the time of its building was such that it was pronounced "perhaps the most remarkable structure in the world." Engineering, a British magazine, speaking of its test, when five engines, weighing 360 tons, were placed on a single span, said: "The result is the complete establishment of this fact (so important to the public), that the bridge is strong out of all proportion to its possible necessities. The load which the structure is calculated to carry is six times greater than that to which it was subjected."

And yet this great bridge, which cost $1,750,000, collapsed within a few months after it was finished, the accident being the only one in all railroad history in which no survivor lived to tell the tale.

The theory of crystallization put forward at the time of the Ashtabula bridge disaster is now accepted as accounting for many railroad accidents, and seems peculiarly applicable to the fall of the Bussey bridge. Vibrations and hammer blows would seem to have crystallized some portion of the structure and prepared it for a fall when at last the "life" of a girder had been exhausted, and it broke beneath the engine's thumping driving wheels.—Philadelphia Record.

Shooting into a Snow Bank.

Col. White's experiments on the resistance offered by a bank of snow to a rifle bullet, which were made at Ottawa, were most interesting. It was found that the Martini bullets fired into a bank of well packed snow were completely spent after traversing a distance of not more than four feet. Snider bullets, in hard packed snow mixed with ice, but not hard enough to prevent digging into it with a sheet iron shovel, did not penetrate more than about four feet; in perfectly dry snow, packed by natural drift, but capable of being easily crushed in the hand, a bullet penetrated about four feet, and in loose drifted, dry snow less than seven feet, though fired from points only twenty-nine or thirty yards distant.—Montreal Witness.

Queen Victoria Not Popular.

The queen is not popular. Very few people know anything about her. I do not believe that 15 per cent. of the people of London have ever seen her. She lives such a retired life that she is rarely taken into consideration in connection with public questions. She appears to have very little sympathy with English people and to be as foreign at heart as if she had always lived on the continent. This is shown whenever she goes over to the continent for a change. She is quite another person when she is over there. The French people are delighted with her and the French papers are filled with glowing accounts of her popularity at Aix-les-Bains. When she is on the continent she goes out and mixes with people and shows herself everywhere on all public occasions. But in England she shuts herself up like a recluse and only with great difficulty can be persuaded to spend two or three weeks in London during the year.—London Cor. New York World.

Dickens as an Actor.

Carlyle referred to Dickens as an actor, having seen him in one of his amateur performances. He gave it as his opinion that Dickens' genius was essentially histrionic and mimetic; that with his faculty of keen and minute observation, his general alertness of mind and body, his mobile power of gesture and expression, he had all the requisites of a successful actor, and that had he lived at a great period of the drama, in the Elizabethan age for instance, his genius would have found its appropriate outlet on the stage. He would have become a popular comic actor, writing a humorous piece now and then, perhaps, as was the custom of such actors in those days. But while living under different conditions and working with his pen, his books still retained and revealed the native genius of their author. They had the sustained, if rather jerky, liveliness, the pleasant tricks and mannerisms of humorous portraiture upon the stage. He was, in short, a born actor.—The Athenaeum.

A Derbyshire Story.

A correspondent calls to mind that in Derbyshire a story was told about fifty years ago which has some resemblance to the story of Tam o' Shanter, as related or adapted by Burns. Upon a dark evening, as a man was riding homeward, he passed a large house which was all ablaze with light. From within came a sound of music and dancing. The house, he knew, was said to be haunted, and, being curious to see what was going on, he went in at the door. He was invited by the revelers, who appeared to be ordinary men and women, to supper. Accordingly he sat down at the supper table, but before he began to eat he asked his host to say grace. The guests said, "Hush!" but the host did not say grace. Then the stranger shut his eyes and said grace himself devoutly. When he opened them all was still, the inmates had gone and he was left in utter darkness.—Notes and Queries.

Counterfeiting Old Cremonas.

To such a great extent is counterfeiting and experting carried on that fully half the so-called Cremonas are spurious, being inferior instruments, doctored and altered. There was one expert in New York who had a number of tickets printed on dingy paper with the names of prominent makers, which he placed in all sorts of instruments and sold with a guarantee.

They say that a violinist can detect a rare instrument by its tone, which can not be imitated. The appearance can be imitated, but not the tone, it has often been declared. There is even a way of deceiving the ear by thinning the wood of the breast underneath the bridge. The purchaser looks only at the thickness of the wood, indicated by the f. f. holes, and the tones being responsive will lead him to believe the violin an old and rare instrument. But it will deteriorate with time.—St. Louis Republican.

The Stamp Mania in Persia.

The stamp mania exists among European residents at Teheran no less than it does in Europe, and the reader may be surprised to learn that it is quite as difficult to make a complete collection of Persian stamps at Teheran as in London. The interest shown in the subject there is indicated by an incident that happened during my residence in Persia. A duel came near being fought on account of a rare Persian stamp. The quarrel was between a prominent member of one of the legations and a Russian colonel. Both were enthusiastic collectors, and the former accused the latter of stealing an excessively rare stamp from his album when looking it over. The Russian at once sent a challenge, which was accepted with empressement. The day was appointed and the hour, when the stamp was suddenly produced by a lady, who said it had been loaned to her by the colonel simply to show it to her, and she now hastened to return it in season to prevent bloodshed. The explanation, unsatisfactory as it might be, was accepted and the duel was declared off.—S. G. W. Benjamin.

Fashionable Profanity.

In the way of shocking things, fashionable profanity among wealthy and refined girls may be mentioned. While it has not gone to the extent of the worst oaths from feminine lips in good society, the milder expletives have come into piquant use. The evil began last autumn with a vogue for quaint exclamations. These were at first merely original and curious, and the girl who could make unique ejaculations was thereby distinguished in her circle. Gradually the demand for stronger, riskier language arose, and the license of fashion extended to almost but not quite outright oaths. Now the genuine damn is not unheard in the boudoir and parlor of the belle, and she exclaims, "My God," on the slightest occasion. The latter offense is excused by some in consequence of French precedent. Parisian ladies of the aristocracy say "Mon Dieu" commonly. But the habit has reached its limit here, revulsion has come and profanity from sweet mouths may be expected to cease this spring.—New York Letter.

Why Is It Twenty-one Guns?

Former Sub Treasurer Thomas C. Acton met a reporter in Wall street the other day and said: "For fifteen years I have hunted high and low to find the reason for firing twenty-one guns as a national salute, not only in this but in other countries. I applied to the army and navy departments for information, and was told that it was a 'regulation.' I knew that before. I then asked Judge Charles P. Daly, who knows about everything that is worth knowning, and Judge Daly couldn't help me. What I want to know is, why are twenty-one guns always fired for a national salute?"—Philadelphia Call.

A Boom for the Trombone.

Berlioz thus "caps" for the trombone. It possesses, he says, "nobleness and grandeur;" it chants, laments and occasionally betrays "a religious accent, calm and imposing," and not seldom has an "expression of heroic pomp of loftiness." And he is speaking of the regular, every evening trombones, too. You wouldn't think it possessed all the above attachments to look at it in the corner of the orchestra and hear its steady "com-pas" in the loud work, although to hear it being practiced in the same house you would readily believe that there was more in it than you ever thought.—New York Clipper.

TROUBLE AHEAD.

When the appetite fails, and sleep grows restless and unrefreshing, there is trouble ahead. The digestive organs, when healthy, crave food, the nervous system, when vigorous and tranquil, gives its possessor no uneasiness at night. A tonic, to be effective, should not be a mere appetizer, nor are the nerves to be strengthened and soothed by the unaided action of a sedative or a narcotic. What is required is a medicine which invigorates the stomach, and promotes assimilation of food by the system, by which means the nervous system, as well as other parts of the physical organism, are strengthened. These are the effects of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine whose reputation is founded firmly in public confidence, and which physicians commend for its tonic, anti-bilious and other properties. It is used with the best results in fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney and uterine weakness, and other maladies.

Converted cowboy, with pistol—Took yer Maker's name in vain, did yer? Now air yer gwine to come inter the Gospel corral or will yer remain in yer present state of sin and misery?

"The light that lies,
In woman's eyes,"
is a ray of heaven's own brightness; but it is, alas! often dimmed or quenched by some wearing disease, perhaps silently borne, but taking all comfort and enjoyment out of life. That light of the household can be rekindled and made to glow with its natural brightness. Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" is a potent specific for most of the chronic weaknesses and diseases peculiar to women.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Suffering Womanhood.

Too much effort cannot be made to bring to the attention of suffering womanhood the great value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a remedy for the diseases of women. Such an one is the wife of General Barringer of Winston, N. C., and we quote from the General's letter as follows: "Dear Mrs. Pinkham: Please allow me to add my testimony to the most excellent medicinal qualities of your Vegetable Compound. Mrs. Barringer was treated for several years for what the physician called Leucorrhœa and Prolapsus Uteri combined. I sent her to Richmond, Va., where she remained for six months under the treatment of an eminent Physician without any permanent benefit. She was induced to try your medicine and after a reasonable time commenced to improve and is now able to attend to her business and considers herself fully relieved." [General Barringer is the proprietor of the American Hotel, Winston, N. C., and is widely known.]

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 10, 1886.

I have received many letters in reference to my testimonial, lately published, commending ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS.

I cannot spare the time to answer them in writing, therefore would again say, through the press, that I have found ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS invaluable as chest protectors and shields against coughs and colds. Furthermore, I have found ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS unequaled for pains in the back and chest.

LIFE IN BULGARIA.

A Trip Through a Strange Country Inhabited by an Industrious People.

From Slivnitza to Sofia is thirty kilometers, with good roads all the way. The cathedral and Parliament house, with the white villas of the new European quarter, which stands on high ground, are visible an hour before the capital is reached. There is scarcely any traffic on the road. Once in ten miles we may meet a droschky drawn by four horses, harnessed abreast, and with jingling bells, and twice as often a rickety carriage that looks like a palanquin on wheels, and contains four passengers, who have to sit with their heads bent because their hats would otherwise touch the ceiling. No dwelling above the rank of cottage is to be seen in any direction, for the land laws make it impossible that a squirearchy should grow up, and the country has not yet any rich merchants who can build rustic summer residences with parks and gardens. Yet in the land, so unlike England, except in its green beauty, incongruous reminiscences of Henley regatta and Lord's ground are brought up every moment by the holiday dress of the peasantry, which at a short distance looks like that of our cricksters and oarsmen. The men wore trousers of white chalak or woolen homespun, red sashes, Oxford blue jackets and scarlet skull caps. A group of them on a grass plat makes one look around for the familiar tent, the pickets and the rival eleven fielding out. The women have a graceful head drapery of Turkish lawn, and their dresses are profusely embroidered with that beautiful crewel work of silk or wool which the Turkish women used to make, but which is made no longer since they left the land. These embroideries are still to be bought fairly cheap, but in a few years the railways will have carried them all off to the west. Already Bulgarian women are beginning to understand their value and are putting them away for sale, along with the Turkey carpets, mats and rich bed counterpanes which make the interior of so many Bulgarian cottages contrast marvelously with the outside. It is quite a common thing to find in these hovels, grimy with smoke and infested with vermin, hangings and dresses which could be sold for a guinea the square foot in Regent street, and the color of this stuff is so fine, the material so pure, and the work so good and firm that a little cleaning will make a fifty-year-old embroidery look like new. Alas, some apostles of civilization in the form of German bagmen have latterly taught the Bulgarian women that they can mix a little cotton with their wool and use cheaper materials for their dyes, so that even the comfortable white and blue chalaks, which were warm in winter and light in summer, which kept out rain and rheumatism, which could be darned and redarned, and worn down to the thread, are now yielding to textures which, for trade purposes, bear the same name, but of which the properties have nothing in common with the original. It is the German bagman, too, who has brought to Sofia the suits of shoddy that shrink at the touch of water, the printed cotton stuffs of which the colors are warranted fast—that is, fast to disappear; the watches, guaranteed for a twelve-month, and which go for just that length of time—no more—and the gimcrack furniture which limps, turns scaly, will not lock, and misbehaves itself in a dozen other ways in the new houses of the European quarter.

Dashing through the Turkish streets of the city as hard as the coachman can drive—for no isvoteshik ever yet entered an Oriental town without acting as if he meant to run over the inhabitants—one finds the modern part of Sofia looking like a new watering-place that is just becoming fashionable. The Prince's palace might well pass for the customary casino. In front of it is a large public garden where military bands play; hard by is the principal hotel, with seaside prices, a couple of large cafes, with French and German newspapers, billiards and beer; a row of good shops, a cab stand and a hundred yards of pavement, which is the favorite lounge of well-dressed officers and, in stirring times, of politicians and newspaper correspondents. In the adjoining streets there are many gaps of waste land; but the whole assemblage of new government and consular buildings and private villas of one or two stories is clean and pretty. The British agency occupies a substantial block; the Russian consulate is a palace of somewhat pretentious style; the residence of the Austro-Hungarian agent, with its turret and long glass veranda, suggests some such name as Bellevue or Belvidere mansion. Then there is the well-situated and capitally-managed Union Club, which is a great boon to the diplomatic body and to strangers. Altogether Sofia has a much more promising appearance than Belgrade, and the whole atmosphere of the town is that of a place where the inhabitants are accustomed to act for themselves, and are not afraid to speak out their minds.—Cor. London Times.

Law and Liberty.

Mr. Phelps, United States Minister to England, delivered a lecture before the Institute of Philosophy, at Edinburgh, in the course of which he said that law is a reflex of public opinion and should thus be maintained, or it would perish in a free country. Liberty, said Mr. Phelps, is not a privilege of the strong, but a protection of the weak. Nor are the rich chiefly interested in the maintenance of the rights of property. The less property a man has the more important it is to him that it be safe. No property will be safe when once the general security that protects all alike has been lost. It is a delusion to suppose that this security can be impaired to a certain extent and preserved for the residue. There can be no middle ground. Either title to lawful property must be universally respected or it ceases to be protected at all.—N. Y. Post.

NEW THINGS IN TOYS.

Yankee Ingenuity Leading the Old World in Oddities and Novelties.

The European toy-maker is being rapidly supplanted by the American manufacturer. New York has become the great distributing point for toys, but the ingenious Yankees of Connecticut make most of them. New York children, too, buy more expensive playthings than those of any other city, but Philadelphia juveniles use more in proportion to the population. The head of a large wholesale house for the sale of children's goods states that recently he shipped five hundred gross of toy pistols to Bombay for sale among the children of India. A large consignment of playthings was sent not very long ago to South Africa. Toy pistols and tin horses hitched to red wagons are the favorite articles with the South Africans. Some of these toys go to the children, and occasionally, when one chief wants to propitiate another, he sends an advance-guard to palaver with the person, to whom they make such presents as half a dozen 10-cent toy revolvers, a few tin dogs and cats and a base-ball mask. All goods for the African trade must be painted in gay colors.

The number of patents covering mechanical toys is very large. The horse that trots around the table with a red wagon and a driver whipping him at every jump is covered with three patents that yield remunerative royalties. At present a large percentage of the business is in toy pistols for the Fourth of July. In fact, the pistol is the staple article of the trade. The old-time fire-arm that shot a blank cartridge has been driven out of the market by a pistol or a self-cocking revolver that shoots a paper cap. Brass cannons made with as great care to provide against flaws as a piece of war ordnance, sell at from $2 to $10 each, and mortars that shoot a wooden ball high in the air with a loud report, are among the novelties. Base-ball goods for boys are now made by automatic machinery, and a mask, which formerly cost a lad 75 cents, can be bought for 25. Curious mechanical toys of figures going through the motion of playing base ball, and a negro fighting an Irishman, sell at from $8 to $5, and a new one representing a drunken man trying to unlock his front door with a latch key, while his wife stands at an upper window and angrily wags her jaw, is sold largely for saloons. If a boy is rich enough to spend from $10 to $35 he can get a splendid locomotive that runs by steam on a circular track for an hour and a half. It has a tubular boiler, the heat is engendered by an alcohol lamp with half a-dozen wicks, and a too-heavy load of steam is relieved by a safety-valve. The most novel piece of rolling stock now sold is a locomotive that runs by clock-work around the table. Suddenly a little bomb inside is bursted, springs fly out and the engine is knocked to pieces. The exploding locomotive is almost equaled, in the boy's estimation, by one that smokes a cigarette in its stack and puffs out the smoke as it runs.

A great many people make a living by manufacturing toys in New York. A score of Italians make pin wheels of gay colors which they sell on the streets at five cents apiece. Their best patrons are the rich youngsters who promenade Fifth avenue. The most artistically made play things sold in the city are miniature yachts manufactured by a model maker on One Hundred and Tenth street. He makes full-rigged little crafts of approved models, correct in all their details and warranted to sail as well as a full-sized yacht. Boys who have $20 to $50 to spend on such a play thing patronize the model maker.—N. Y. Cor. Denver Republican.

FOREST PRESERVATION.

A Duty Which the Present Generation Owes to Its Successors.

Thus the matter of forest preservation is, in the main, a problem for the immediate future; save in the valley of the Ohio and, perhaps, on the Adirondacks the process of destruction has not as yet begun to give extremely serious results.

It seems, however, certain that the conditions which have postponed the question of forest management have about exhausted their influence, and that in the next half century we shall imperatively need a systematic control of our remaining timbered districts.

The Western prairie lands, or at least those parts of that vast region of treeless plains which are suitable for tillage without a costly system of irrigation, are generally possessed by settlers. Already the population begins to press back upon the older districts, which were passed by as long as the best lands of the West were to be had for the asking. A large part of the Appalachian forest district, though affording poorer soils than the prairies, is second-class land which can be profitably tilled if we count as profit the interest of the farmer alone, without considering the effect of this tillage on the rest of the country. Considered from a wider point of view, we can not afford to have it tilled; for the reason that we need the existing forests for the supply of timber they may afford, as well as for their effect on the rainfall and the water supply of the rivers in whose valleys they lie.

The forests are a precious heritage of man—they provided him a cradle; they furnished him the soil, and they still offer him their help in some of his greatest needs. No man has the right to destroy them when their destruction means calamity to his fellows or his successors. To give the individual the right to appropriate and overthrow them at his will is to constitute him a cruel despot; if such privileges exist in the laws framed by a short-sighted past, it is time they were annulled.—Scribner's Magazine.

A GYPSY PARTY.

Life Among a Mysterious People Who Enjoy a Perfect Government.

The make-up of the usual party of Gypsies for the road is the same wherever you come upon any considerable number. There will always be found the sedate and quiet Gypsy of past the middle age, with a wife who is far more active and assertive than himself. They are usually reserved and quiet, and eat, drink and live their quiet, contented lives apparently a little apart from the hey-dey of the boisterous life of the band. You will find three or four or more families that know these two for the parent stock, and the elderly man and wife possess that air of contentment and repose which comes from unquestioned station worthily won. They will travel in a fine carriage in easy comfort, may be, and such are oftentimes discovered to be the "king" and "queen" of this particular band, though you would never know it from any airs of authority or manner of dress. Yet their decisions—the man's upon the affairs of the men, the woman's upon the affairs of the women—are absolute. A Gypsy would as soon think of becoming Gorgio outright as to have even an impulse to question them. Indeed it is worthy of remark here that Gypsy civil government, if it may be given so dignified a term, would seem to have always and almost unconsciously been the very ideal of adequateness, perfection and simplicity. Here, as nowhere else on earth, law is the perfect will of a people expressed through designated authority. This people by direct vote elect their rulers. Authority no more dare an abuse of power than dare the most insignificant integral of the concrete power-creating source question that power. So that here, with what your political and social philosophers would be pleased to call a semi-civilized people, is found a government of people by people for people, infinitely more perfect in theory, and exact and true to theory in permanent practice, than was ever even formulated by sunniest dreamer in all republics of beneficent oratoric symmetry rather than actual liberty and equality under hard tests of friction and use. There are also found a dozen other families, may be. Of these one or two may travel in wagons which alone have cost small fortunes. But in the daily lives and manner of their owners there can never be found vanity and caste because of superior possession, nor envy among less fortunate Romany, who seem proud rather than chagrined that their fellows can show the gentiles such respectable belongings. Of these dozen or more families every man and every woman is a master of horse lore, horse care and of horsemanship. A lad of twelve or a lass of fifteen is a trader, a jockey and a veterinarian. A number of animals besides those in actual use always accompany the band. These are traded, sold or added to at a moment's notice. This summer, in Connecticut, a young Gypsy with whom I was pilgriming on being bantered to sell the one nag which drew our little democrat wagon, sold him on the spot to some overwise farmers coming from the town hilarious with drink, and cooly invited me to assist in dragging the vehicle into camp, some four miles distant. On our arrival we were greeted with cheers; but I half suspect it was not so much from the camp's recognition of my Gypsy companion's thrift as it was from the entire band's enjoyment in seeing the "Gorgio chal," as they call me, transformed into a nimble and tractable grye (horse). The band always has three or four old spae-wives—old, old women that remind one of the grewsome Norma of Scott's creation. Heaven only knows how old these venerable and lively relics are. But their virility, activity and wisdom are marvelous. To penetrate the caution, deceit, canniness and diablerie of these blessed witches is matchless work. For months I have exercised my wiliest arts upon some of them, and am just able to discover they are part human. I am allowed by one to occasionally come of an evening to her tent and tell her of some of the pleasant things of Gorgio life; and under frequent severe protest, to calmly urge that all mankind are one. To another, born before the century, I have made a poem, and am not blighted, so that I feel progress is making. The camp smile on me, though, and shake their heads betimes. If there be aught in Gypsyism allied to the ancient being (devil) himself, these auld raunies possess it all and communicate it in their presence and influence. But that sort of witchery is fading slowly out of the Gypsy people. Little by little the younger blood, tenderly enough, but surely and stubbornly, refuses its mysticism, dread and fetich glamour.—Edgar D. Wakeman, in Chicago News.

Men's Scarfs and Neckties.

All scarfs are larger now that vests and coats are cut lower, yet the glimpse of the shirt bosom is seen on each side. Scarfs tied by the wearer are most popular, and there are also scarfs made up to look as if they had been tied when put on. Both very light and very dark scarfs are worn in figures and stripes of silk, or satin, or armure goods. Some folded scarfs are shown slightly puffed or else flat, but the preferance is for knotted scarfs. White cambric ties for evening are slightly wider, but are still very narrow. Large silk mufflers to wear inside the overcoat are very dark for day use, and are striped with satin in self-colors or in contrast; for evening use they are cream white and also very pale lemon-colored damask satin, or with stripes, or else bordered.—Harper's Bazar.

—"Her Majesty," writes a London correspondent, "eats at state dinners without gloves." The reason for that is at once apparent. It enables her Majesty to get a better grip on the wing of a chicken. In wrestling with the common hen of commerce at the dinner-table she must be handled without gloves, or the battle is lost. Gloves would also be very much in the way when her Majesty desired to clutch an ear of corn by each end, the tip and the lobe, so to speak, while she gnawed at it amidships. You see, there are a hundred emergencies that might arise during the progress of a state dinner wherein gloves would be in the way.—Brooklyn Eagle.

BURDETTE.

Odd Bits of His Wit—The Terror of Red Dog.

"Look here! I hain't been raised on beetles myself; I don't eat 'em at home and I ain't goin' to eat 'em when I pay for bean soup."

It was Samuel Standish Winthrop who spoke, turning angrily away from the best table in the only hotel at Red Dog. Samuel Standish Winthrop, the only son of one of the oldest and proudest families of Boston; a graduate of Harvard; brilliant, a poet, artist, an accomplished linguist, a lecturer, and a man who, young as he was, had once read Browning in the original Vandyke Brown. Polished, courtly and refined in speech and manner, the child of the oldest and best culture of this continent was a strange contrast to the rough scene and rougher men around him. There were a few of the inhabitants of Red Dog in the dining room at the time. Most of the boys were in the mines, and Jim Wild, Maj. Coldeck and Judge Lynch had gone out to bury a stranger from Ohio, whom it was found necessary to shoot during the discussion over the relative merits of four and a full, so that, with the exception of a few miners and gamblers lounging at the bar, the room was comparatively deserted. Winthrop raised his voice with that perfect modulation that spoke his university training:

"I say, gardner, bring along a dip net and scoop out these beetles. I take my soup and birds separate."

Rising lazily from the floor in a corner of the room, where he sat in the dust mending a forlorn pair of ancient moccasins, Tarantula Sam, the unkempt, tattered, lazy hostler, waiter and man of all work at the Red Dog hostelry, shuffled up to the table and leaning over the young Boston aa's shoulder, with a deftness born of the mountain and camp easily fished out the obnoxious insect with his finger.

"See, Signor," said the half breed, holding it before him, "you are mistaken; it is not a true beetle; I hardly thought it could be possible in this latitude. Note the vertical elongation of the head, the slender antennæ, the large reniform compound eyes, the shield-like tergal portion of the prothorax, overlapping the head in front and the tergal portion of the mesothorax behind; the increasing length of the strong legs, from the first pair to the last; the elongated, many jointed, setose styles—cerci—at its extremity; all these mark one of the least modified forms of the insecta, Blatta orientalis, the common cockroach of commerce."

The half breed paused, with the cockroach held meditatively in his fingers; there was a little movement in the group of idlers, gamblers, teamsters and miners at the bar; Col. Tarheel, the landlord, broke the silence with, "Well, I will be doggone."

Samuel Standish Winthrop had fallen down dead on the floor.

GIVE ME EXCESS OF IT.

"Music," says Carlyle, "is a kind of inarticulate, unfathomable speech, which leads us to the edge of the infinite and lets us for moments gaze into that." I am easily moved "with concord of sweet sounds," I love the "old and antique song more than light airs, and recollected terms of these most brisk and giddy paced times," but never did I appreciate Carlyle's saying until a few nights since, when I heard Patti sing "Home, Sweet Home." I will give you one stanza myself:

"Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble there's no place like home;
A charm from the skies seems to hallow us there,
Which, seek through the world, is not met with elsewhere.
Home! home, sweet, sweet home!
There's no place like home;
There's no place like home."

PERFECTION.

A friend who was sitting to Micheal Angelo for a revised statue called on the sculptor with his best expression, and some time afterward called again; the sculptor was still sculpting, although he was no sculpin. His friend looking at his work said: "You have not been idle since I saw you last, but you had better have been." "By no means," replied the sculptor. "I have retouched this part and polished that; I have softened this feature and brought out this muscle; I—" "You have twisted my upper lip; you have made a great wrinkle across the cheek; you have carved a wart on the nose and set the ear further back, and made one eye crooked," exclaimed the friend. "But these are trifles," said the sculptor, "and trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle." But the remarks which his friend dropped as he started for the rival gallery across the way convinced Michael that it is easier to run a powder mill in Brimstoneville than it is to please an unmarried man with his picture.

AUNT LUCINDY HILL.

Death of a Colored Woman Who Washed Mrs. Washington's Feet.

The death of Aunt Lucindy Hill, in Marion County, recalls her to the memory of the oldest citizens of Augusta, who recollect her as having been the housemaid of General Heard when George Washington visited Augusta during his Presidential term. She was assigned to the service of Mrs. Washington during her stay in Augusta, and it was her constant boast in after life that she had "washed Lady Washington's feet." Aunt Lucindy and her husband, Uncle Jim Hill, settled in the northern part of Marion County after the war. They were both pure Africans, black as the ace of spades, but polite and obliging in their disposition. They were then people of great age, but refused to live on charity, working as long as health permitted. The old man grew so decrepit that he could not leave his cabin, when Aunt Lucindy undertook to provide for him alone. She made a visit to the family of W. H. Carrington, and, leaving that house near sunset, was heard of no more until a week later, when some boys found her dead body on an unused pathway, which she had taken for home. It is supposed that she was taken suddenly ill, rendering it impossible for her to reach her home, and, lying down, she died alone. Her husband, being unable to leave his cabin, could not give the alarm of her absence. Uncle Jim, who is remarkably intelligent for one of his color, bemoaned the loss of his wife sadly, but readily answered all questions asked. From this conversation it was learned that before the war Jim had asked his master his age. Consultation with the slave record showed that Jim was at that time seventy-five years old at least. He met Aunt Lucindy after she had been sold by General Heard to William Thomas, who took her to Clarke County. He said that she was his second wife, his first wife and children having been sold from him. Thinking that Aunt Lucindy was then too old to have more children, he married her seventy years ago. Although she had borne by her first husband thirteen children, she afterwards became the mother of nine more by her second marriage. Years after Aunt Lucindy and her children were placed upon the block in Watkinsville. The sale had been well advertised, and its success may be imagined when it is stated that the family was knocked down to the highest bidder for the sum of $30,000. "Me and de ole 'oman got together agin arter de wah," said the old man, "but de chillun was scattered so we could hear no more of 'em.—Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.

GAVE THEMSELVES AWAY.

How Seven Enterprising Newspaper Men Reported a Secret Meeting.

I remember one occasion, more than twenty years ago, when the representatives of several papers were directed to learn all they could about a secret caucus. Each man was on his mettle, but all were kept at a safe distance from the room in which the noted politicians met. When the meeting was called to order the reporters were in despair, because they were under guard, as it were, in a room separated from the assembly hall by a wide corridor, or so situated that they could see nothing and hear nothing. But it so happened that along that side of the hall were a number of low windows. The heavy ground glass prevented those who used the corridor from seeing what was going on within, but admitted the light.

As the seven or eight newspaper men were sitting disconsolate, looking across to the caucus room, the shadow of a man appeared on the glass of the almost continuous window extending along the side. Some one had mounted the chair to address the chairman of the meeting, and the boys recognized him by his gestures. In the midst of what appeared to be a rather excited speech he was pulled down from behind, and another man a little further to the front popped up. The new speaker was recognized by the contour of his head and the cut of his clothes. The reporters scattered at once to different points of observation, and when the caucus ended they had a pretty fair record of the persons who had spoken. Knowing how the speakers stood on the question before the meeting, they made up from their shadow pantomine certain prognostications as to what was said, on which they interviewed every man whose shadow they had seen on the ground glass of the windows.

Going to one man, a reporter would say, "Baker talks too much with his hands, doesn't he?" and then he would go through the gestures characteristic of Mr. Baker when he was much excited, accompanying them with certain declarations of his own. This would be greeted with a laugh and corrections would be made. To another man another reporter would say that his remarks had been criticised by some one who mimicked his gestures and who gave out the impression that the old gentleman had made a goose of himself, and he reporter would indulge in some extravagant gestures characteristic of the speaker. This would be followed by an indignant denial and by a hasty statement of what he did say. Working in this way the seven men before midnight had by comparing notes and observations written out a pretty fair report of what occured inside the hall.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

JAPANESE PROGRESS.

Among the late arrivals at San Francisco from Japan were W. C. De Lano Eastlake and his mother. In an interview with a reporter, Mr. Eastlake portrayed in pleasing colors the country and its people.

The people are fast advancing in the civilization of their political, moral and intellectual lives. In the customs of dress there has been a marked change during the last decade, until now the officials and the better classes assume the English costume. Among the former it is compulsory, and upon the street the old Japanese garb is seldom seen except on the poorer classes. Among the ladies, however, the loose gowns of the olden days are still popular, but even these are gradually becoming obsolete and at the fashionable balls the European dress is generally assumed, while the programmes of the Japanese orchestras generally include the best of English music.

The odd yet picturesque style of hair-dressing which has so long prevailed in the country has been superseded by that of the American woman, and the fair foreheads of the royal ladies are already hidden by the bang so common in our own country. The fashions, however, are not set by the Empress. The style adopted by the Ministers' wives is considered quite the proper thing, and following their example, all ladies of culture have stopped blacking their teeth and shaving their eyebrows.

The intellectual progress of the people of Japan has been almost unparalleled. Not only has the educational system been established all over the empire, but the capital city boasts of a university that can compare favorably with the best colleges of the continent. German professors, prominent for scientific works and research, have filled the chairs in the scientific and medical departments of the Imperial University, while in literature, both ancient and modern, English and American of advanced thought have been chosen instructors. Recently the staff of foreign professors has been diminished and the vacancies filled by Japanese literati who have returned from study abroad.

The works of Huxley, Spencer, Darwin and others have been translated into Japanese, and are familiar handbooks to students in Japan. The promulgators of Christianity find that they have a proud scepticism to contend with. The Japanese talk of the "evolution of species" and the nebular hypothesis as glibly as our learned men. Buddhism is still the predominating faith, but Christianity is rapidly establishing itself among the more intellectual classes, although many of the high officials express extreme bitterness to the doctrine and its introduction. This bitterness is so great that to profess Christianity means the loss of an official position. The people are not conservative, however, and it is only a matter of time when the Christian faith will be accepted throughout the country. In all the large cities public schools are maintained, and it is compulsory that after attaining a certain age children shall be sent to school. In Tokio there are two large law schools, one of which is conducted in the French and the other in the English language. Added to these is an engineering college, with over 20,000 volumes, and its extensive laboratories, which have been recently merged with the Imperial College.

Political affairs are not behind in the onward march of civilization, and the chief excitement of the country now is the preparation for the National Assembly promised for 1890. The ground is already purchased and the Assembly buildings commenced, although there is naturally some misapprehension on the part of suspicious minds that the Government may not carry out its promises to the people. As it now stands, the government is in the hands of the Emperor, assisted by the Senate and House of Lords, which in the Japanese is called "Gen ro-in." The National Assembly will be composed of representatives elected by the people from the various districts into which the country is divided, thus making the empire a partial republic. Laws regarding press criticism and public speech are very stringent, and in neither is criticism of the Government allowed. Regarding Japan's relations with America I am able to speak at length. My visit to this country is in the interest of an extension of the mercantile traffic. The United States and its people are regarded with great respect by the Japanese, and in their eyes, as the Fiji Shompo, one of the leading journals, expresses it, America stands out in the world like a blossoming plum branch among a thicket of brambles, diffusing a rich fragrance and compelling the admiration of all for her great name and vigorous policy.—San Francisco Chronicle.

What Would Follow.

Were such a thing possible as the substitution of a chemical for animal and vegetable food, some very curious results would follow. An article in a scientific journal says that the man of the future will be toothless and hairless. As there will be no need for teeth in assimilating a nutrient that would probably be liquid in form, the human teeth might, from want of use, disappear or become rudimentary. Then fat people would disappear, for chemistry would control the conditions which lead to the formation of adipose tissue. If there would be less work for the human stomach, the abdomen would diminish in size, while, possibly, the lungs might be still further enlarged. But the general digestive apparatus would be in better shape, as the chemistry of food could be adapted to every variety of system. This all may seem very wild, but in view of what science has done in the world about us, what may it not accomplish, when its improved and improving processes are applied directly to the human race?—Demorest's Monthly.

CRAZY KING OTTO.

Incidents of the Mad Bavarian Monarch's Life at Nymphenburg.

Of the life and habits of the present King of Bavaria very little is known, even to his own subjects. The crowds of officials and servants attending on him have direct orders to keep His Majesty as much as possible out of sight of the public eye. The King lives at present at Nymphenburg, a suburb of Munich, in a secluded castle, which is surrounded by a vast forest. No one except the officers and the members of the royal family is allowed to enter the castle, nor is the unhappy monarch allowed to quit his solitude oftener than once or twice a month. Of late the King's lucid moments have become rarer and are of short duration. Whenever he is allowed to walk in the dense woods right in the neighborhood of his castle, a strong guard always accompanies him. The police are notified days before and search every spot within ten miles of Nymphenburg to scare away the curious crowds which are always sure to gather on these occasions. In spite of the strict watch of a numerous body of police your correspondent succeeded in catching a glimpse of the lunatic monarch. He is a fine-looking man, tall and slender in appearance, his steps are short, hasty and not seldom faltering. He resembles his brother, the late Ludwig, a good deal, but his features are of a softer and more feminine cast. His hair is of a darker hue. His eyes are blue, but they are a sad pair of human eyes to behold. They are dull and lifeless—the eyes of an idiot.

The King is as helpless as a baby. After rising late in the morning he has to be dressed, and then is put in his chair. He very soon makes known his desire for a breakfast, and a cup of chocolate is brought him. He is very fond of chocolate. He drinks but little, however, and then calls for his body-servant named "Fritz." "Fritz," who knows the Kings that are to come, obeys the call of his lord. As soon as he is within reach of the King's arms the insane man, with a pleasant smile, pours the rest of his chocolate over "Fritz's" head, bids him go away, and throws the cup after him. "Fritz," who is paid well, does not mind it much. He, as well as the other lackeys attending on the King, wear old and soiled liveries, for sometimes the King throws other things than cups of chocolate at their loyal heads.

King Otto likes to go to his safe, take out small pieces of money, and either distribute them among his attendants or throw them out of the window.

Three or four times a week the Queen Dowager of Bavaria, King Otto's mother, comes to see him. The unfortunate man does not know his mother any more. When his lackeys lead her into his apartments the poor idiot often takes her to be a poor woman. He gives a little money to the next courtier and tells him to give it to "that poor woman." The Queen's deep grief may be imagined. Poor Otto has always been her favorite child. In his youth King Otto was a fine, handsome boy. He gave promise of great intellectual powers. Then his father died. He was allowed to make a tour through Italy. While in the land of everlasting spring, young Otto, little older than eighteen, fell in love with a pretty actress. And after that he fell in love with many other actresses and other women. When he returned to Bavaria he was found to have in his body the seeds of a deadly disease.—N. Y. Graphic.

VON MOLTKE'S ANCESTRY.

The Great German Strategist a Direct Descendant of a Scotch Family.

The Macgillonies of Strone acted against the interests of their chief, Lochiel, and secured the favor of the Lord of the Isles, for the names of their lands are not in the charter that was given to John Garve for the other places in Lochaber. On one occasion, when the MacLeans were defeated, the young widow of one of them fled with her child to Strone and placed him under the protection of the Macgillonies, who acted a most friendly part to him, and reared him carefully until in the course of time he was restored to his kinsmen. He became a stalwart man in the course of years, and was known as John of Lochaber, Iain Abrach, which term continued as the patronymic of the lairds of Coll until they ceased to exist as such.

Count von Moltke is the direct descendant of this child so kindly sheltered in Strone; in fact, he is a MacLean of the house of MacIain Abrach, his grandfather having been a son of one of the lairds of Coll. The grandfather and one of his brothers went as young men to Copenhagen, where they were successful in pushing on to good positions, and the count has proved true to the warlike proclivities of his race. The Count is not the only distinguished son of Iain Abrach whose name has been known to this generation, for the late Hobart Pasha was a great-grandson of the laird of Coll, whose daughter was married to the Earl of Buckinghamshire. The present excellent chief of the clan Cameron—the late member of Parliament for Inverness-shire—is also the great-grandson of this descendant of the ancient foe of his house, through his mother, Lady Vere Hobart; and among the others we may mention the name of Commander Cameron, of African fame, who is the great-grandson of a lady of the house of Coll. This lady's husband was the son of Dr. Archibald Cameron, the brother of the gentle Lochiel of '45, and their son Hector, the grandfather of Commander Cameron, was born in Oban. This Hector was a distinguished soldier and was mayor of Paris during the occupation of the allies after the capture of Napoleon Bonaparte.—Scotsman.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY JULY 23 ..... 1887.

The rapidity with which new settlements are formed in different parts of the State is truly wonderful. The development of natural resources, the increase in population and wealth, go on with a rapidity never before equalled in any State. When this era of prosperity began it was predicted again and again that it could not last; that real estate was run up to fancy prices, and that presently there would be a collapse. These predictions are contradicted by the continued and increasing force of the tide of prosperity. More people than ever are coming into the State; the amount of money invested and the magnitude of works of improvement that are being undertaken are getting greater from month to month. Each great work of improvement that is undertaken suggests others of still greater importance. There is now not the least doubt that this work will go on till every acre of land in the State that can be brought under cultivation will be occupied and improved. When that is done the population of the State will number many millions. The course of events has shown that it is not natural advantages alone that will bring prosperity to any part of the State. Several of the most flourishing settlements were made in regions far inferior in natural advantages to others where even now there are but few signs of improvement. Without intelligence, energy and enterprise on the part of the present settlers, there are many parts of the State possessing rich and varied resources that will drag along in obscurity and dullness. A very few years ago where the orange groves and vineyards of Los Angeles now bloom in beauty, nothing but dreary wastes of sand were seen. The great change would never have been brought about had not tireless and intelligent effort been made to prove to the world the great things of which the country was capable. Much of the change is due to the work of local newspapers. Night and day editors studied and wrote to persuade the world that here was a region where life could be full of enjoyment, and where only well directed labor was needed to make one of the most delightful dwelling places on the earth. But the work of the local papers would not have been sufficient had not these been aided by the merchants and bankers, the professional men, real estate owners, and in a word, all hands had to work to build up Los Angeles, Pasadena, Riverside and the many other towns and settlements that have so suddenly become famous. In climate, in soil, in water Owens Valley possesses advantages far greater than many of the most prosperous of these places. But these resources will long remain undeveloped unless we follow the example of our energetic neighbors. If one person waits for another to do the work; if one business man refuses to bear his part of the necessary expense, and thinks that his neighbors will do all that is necessary and he will reap just as much of the profit as if he worked and contributed, then is our greatness a long way off. All must help if we would attract a part of the great stream of prosperity our way. And not only must all help, but those must help most who are most certain to gain in the greatest degree by every improvement that is made. Every dollar that is spent in improvement or in making known the resources of the country is put out at interest and will reap good return. Spending money in this way is like puring water on the thirsty earth; it disappears from sight only to reappear in trees laden with fruit; in vineyards rich in precious clusters; in fields green with alfalfa, or covered with golden grain. Nature has showered her bounties in rich profusion upon Owens Valley, and if we the present settlers, are not governed by a niggardly spirit that will prefer twenty-five cents in the hand to twenty-five dollars in prospect we can speedily bring about such a rush of prosperity as will soon pass the hopes even of the most sanguine.

Ranch for Sale.

At Black Rock, twelve miles north from Independence, 520 acres of land for sale. Black Rock is one of the very best parts of Owens Valley. Four hundred acres of this land is held under U. S. patent; the remainder is located under the timber culture Act. One hundred and eighty acres are enclosed by a fence of cedar posts and barb wire. Sixty acres are now under cultivation, mostly wheat, oats and barley. A large amount of hay can be cut; blue joint, red clover etc. Several large springs of pure water on the place and good water rights additional. House, outbuildings and corrals. C. & C. railroad half mile distant from east line of land. Owens river eighty rods distant. This is a fine place for an energetic man to improve and will be sold at a bargain. Apply to

C. MULHOLLAND.

MISCELALNEOUS.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer. Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.

JOHN C. EVANS, Scotland, Mo., writes: "I sold one last week that a Washer saves twice its cost in labor and money in a large family; then my Ringer and Mower this year was not on my farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will see on any farm that will take as much labor off of men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does, and cost as much, I could sell one at every house. I did not but to take the bothers from under their sole and labors to pay for it."

JOHN S. BIDDLE, Jr., Leader, Nemaha, Ia., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer I bought last summer. Let it is the best machine ever invented by man. Pa. We have just as good dinners on Monday as on any other day. M. If you can do this, you can make money for life."

I will ship a sample to those desiring an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best washer in the world for using fabric, clothes and scalp. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.

J. WORTH, 1710 Franklin Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Working Classes ATTENTION!

We are now prepared to furnish all classes with employment at home, the whole of the time, or for their spare moments. Business new, light and profitable. Persons of either sex easily earn from 50 cents to $5 00 per evening, and a proportional sum by devoting all their time to the business. Boys and girls earn nearly as much as men. That all who see this may send their address, and test the business, we make this offer. To such as are not well satisfied we will send one dollar to pay for the trouble of writing. Full particulars and outfit free. Address GEORGE STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, JULY 23.....1887.

Farmers need more men to work than can be found in the valley.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Russell left Independence for Renton last Tuesday.

The Sixth District Fair will be held at Los Angeles October 3d to 8th inclusive.

J. C. Irwin is taking a few weeks vacation up in the cool regions around Mount Whitney.

Mr. John Hughes, of Lone Pine, has been allowed a pension as a Mexican war veteran.

A. K. Briggs was at Independence during the week. He has but lately returned from Los Angeles.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at Lone Pine to-morrow [Sunday] at 11 a. m. and at 7:30 in the evening.

John Alexander and Rube Spear are prospecting a vein of ore recently found by the latter in the Waucoba district.

There is scarcity of grain for feed at Independence. All that remained from last year was sold several weeks ago.

R. W. Scott, of Bishop Creek, has gone on a brief visit to Chicago. He went by Mojave and will return a month hence.

Mr. T. J. Goodale, of Fish Springs, was in town yesterday. He brought in some of the finest apples seen in town this year.

The Enterprise says that the fund for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the miners who perished in the Gould & Curry mine recently, amounts to $26,514 15.

The vote in favor of issuing bonds for building a new school house at Independence was nearly unanimous. The building is very much needed.

Since the Reno Gazette passed under the control of Messrs. Preble & Young it has been much improved and enlarged. The Gazette always was a good paper but it is now better than ever.

In response to many complaints from vineyardists the Supervisors of Napa county have passed an ordinance that quail may be killed after August 1st, instead of September 15th as heretofore.

Santa Catalina island, off the coast of Los Angeles, has been sold for $200,000. The purchasers intend to make it a summer resort; the island is twenty miles long and three to five miles wide.

Tom Webb came in from Long Valley this week; he says there are about five thousand head of cattle in the valley and all are looking well. Much complaint is made of damage by sheep.

A girl named Mattie Allen shot and killed James Patterson in Sacramento last Saturday and then committed suicide by taking morphine. A wrong had been done the girl for which the law offers no remedy.

A tract of land in the Santa Ana Valley, Los Angeles county, was sold last Saturday at auction. The tract contains 100,000 acres and the price was $1,350,000. The land will be divided into small lots and sold to settlers.

Sunday School at the M. E. Church at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Services at a quarter to 8 in the evening. The services to-morrow [Sunday] evening will consist mostly of singing. All are invited to attend.

The Defiance mine is now in fine condition. Ore is produced as fast as teams can be got to haul it away. The ore is easily mined, of good quality and leaves a large profit. Mr. Reddy has a very valuable property.

Thomas Williams, of Mono Lake, has sued Miller & Lux for damage done to pasture land by sheep. An offer was made by defendants to pay $600 damage, but this was refused and the case is likely to go to the Supreme Court.

Rumors are current that about September 1st work will be begun on the extension of the C. & C. Railroad to Los Angeles. It is expected that track laying will begin on the south end and be continued northward into Owens Valley.

Many people have died from sunstroke in the East during the past few weeks. The heat has been unusually severe; from Saturday morning till Sunday night sixty-two persons had died in the hospitals of Chicago from the excessive heat.

A tract of land on the farm of W. R. Tibbetts, at Black Rock, is planted with wheat and oats; the crop will average a ton per acre. During sixteen successive years the same ground has been planted with grain. The crop is irrigated but once each year.

Two prospectors came in a few days ago, having large samples of rich silver ore found by them in the Sierras west from Mount Williamson. The prospectors say they are backed by Mr. Murphy, of San Jose, and that there will be no lack of coin to prospect the claim.

A sheep herder came into Big Pine a few days ago bringing some sacks of ore he had picked up in Coyote valley. The ore is rich in gold. A party started out for Coyote the next day to prospect. The valley is high up in the mountains west from Big Pine.

For the eleven months ending June 1, 1887, the value of dried prunes imported by the United States was nearly two millions of dollars. This proves that there is no danger of over supply by home production. Owens Valley will produce the finest of prunes. The few trees now in bearing yield good crops of first class fruit.

The leading business of the Lone Pineers just now is catching trout. A few hours ride carries up to the headwaters of Whitney Creek, near to the everlasting snows, and here they catch the beautiful golden trout in any desired quantity. It is not known if this variety of trout is found anywhere else in the world.

The boys found a snipe hunter a few days ago and had lots of fun. He was led into a tule swamp on the flat and put floundering waist deep in mud. A tramp of three miles back to town wound up the trip. The victim showed so much good sense in taking the joke pleasantly that the perpetrators almost regretted deceiving him.

Another Piece of "Desert."

Many inquiries continue to be made in regard to Owens Valley by people in other States and Territories. The questions are of such a kind as can be best answered by describing what has already been done in the way of improvements. At Camp Independence S. A. Densmore, an old soldier, has three hundred and twenty acres of land. Forty acres are planted with alfalfa; this yields heavy crops each year. Forty acres are usually planted with corn, barley and wheat; crops are always heavy. One hundred and seventy-five head of cattle are now upon the place and the number is increasing. Ten head of horses are kept. Mr. Densmore devotes more attention to fruit raising than to general farming. He now has about two thousand trees in bearing; many of these, however, are young trees now carrying the first crop. He has already marketed this seasons crop of early apples from some of his trees; he says that several of these trees have brought him a return of twenty dollars each. He has also sold some early peaches at a good price. Twelve thousand young trees are set out, including apple, pear, peach, plum, nectarine and other fruits. The growth of the young tree already this season is about five feet. By way of experiment a few trees of the following varieties were planted: Date plum, oriental date, Japanese persimmon, Japanese honey locust, English and American walnuts, several varieties of shade and ornamental trees and figs. All of these have made fine growth, and quite a number are carrying their first crop. No one can look at the pear trees without being astonished at the quantity and excellence of the fruit. Vegetables of all kinds grow in rank profusion. When Mr. Densmore first began to set out fruit trees he practiced irrigation; but he soon discovered that this was not necessary, and he does not now irrigate his trees at all. The land is of the same general character as thousands of acres in the same locality. The property of Mr. Densmore is rapidly increasing in value; it is a beautiful home, made by his own patient industry; there will be many more like it within Owens Valley in a few years.

Darwin Notes

About twenty men are at work in the Defiance mine. Mr. Reddy is employing more men as fast as miners can be found. The mine is developing better every day.

A short distance south from the Defiance an Italian miner was prospecting and about a week ago struck a vein from which he took about ten tons of rich ore in a few days. This will pay him a very large profit

W. Richards and W. Callihan have a lease of the Promontory mine. They recently struck an ore body from which they are getting out a lot of fine ore. They are now certain to make quite a stake out of their lease.

Mr. Frank Fitzgerald was in Darwin last week and took over ten men with him to Lookout. These were all the men he could find in town; he wants more if he could get them.

A gallant military company was organized at Darwin last week. Frank Fitzgerald was chosen Captain and Jack Wilson makes a stately First Lieutenant. When in the course of human events it becomes necessary the Darwin braves will twist the lion's tail till he roars again.

Lone Pine Notes

John Hughes is putting up a building on Main Street, south of the Whitney House to be used as a saloon. The building will be 24x40 feet. Dan Williams will have charge of the place.

Over a year ago Max Cohn discovered a large deposit of gypsum close to town. He made no mention of the discovery at the time, but the establishment of the irrigation district makes it a matter of great importance. Gypsum will make the most alkaline lands fertile. This discovery is sure to be of importance. Several parties have united with Mr. Cohn in making locations.

The people of Lone Pine propose to build a telephone line to the railroad station. The distance is but little over three miles; the line would cost but little and would be a great convenience.

Ed. Manton, an old Darwinite, and George Courtright, the sage of Panamint, are at Lone Pine; both of them are on the sick list.

Supervisors' Proceedings

The Supervisors met as a Board of Equalization at 10 a. m. Thursday. All the members present. The purpose of the meeting was to give a hearing to parties whose assessment had been raised. Rodgers and Jenkins gave satisfactory reasons why their assessment on horses should not be raised, and the Board so ordered. J. H. Dehy testified as to the value of his land. Assessment not raised. Board adjourned till Friday at 9 a. m.

FRIDAY, July 22d.

Board met at 9 a. m. J. W. Riggs' assessment on two horses raised from $10 to $20 each. A. K. Briggs' assessment on improvements at Bishop Creek reduced from $2,500 to $2,000. Ordered that the following amounts on personal property tax collected by the Assessor and not put on the Assessment Roll be put on by the Clerk: J. C. Morris, $5 22; Jan Song, $1 50; Ben. Webster, $3 00; Kan Yan, $1 50. Adjourned till 2 p. m.

Save For The Fair.

Every farmer in the valley should now begin to save something for exhibition at the District Fair. The main object of these fairs is to lead to improvement of farm products of all kinds; this object is to be attained by promoting a healthy rivalry to excel. Sheaves of wheat, oats and barley; bundles of corn; bales of alfalfa, blue joint, timothy, red top and other grasses; potatoes, onions, cabbage, beets, carrots, pumpkins, squash, all these should be shown. The ladies should show the largest possible displays of all kinds of preserved and canned fruits, including jellies; also samples of their cookery, particularly good bread. Needle work should be well represented too, including all kinds of quilted work. Good premiums will be offered for displays of all these things. Let no one refrain from exhibiting; every one may show something that somebody will be delighted to see.

The Stevens Ditch.

Next week water will be turned into about four miles of the Stevens Ditch. The completed portion includes all the most difficult part of the work. A good deal of work is already done on the remainder of the ditch; what is yet to do is all on the surface and in open country where most of the work can be done with plows. By fall enough water will be flowing in the ditch to irrigate at least six sections of land. The ditch belongs to Stevens, Skinner and Jenkins and they have done all the work themselves with the exception of one or two hired men part of the time. The land to be irrigated is all of excellent quality and will make valuable property; it is all within a few miles of Independence.

New Association

A Agricultural Association has been organized at Bishop Creek. The articles of incorporation were filed with the County Clerk last Wednesday and bear the names of many citizens of Mono and Inyo counties. The Directors are David Olds, W. C. T. Elliot, W. W. Collins, N. C. Young, Robert Lowe, J. R. Eldred, Andrew Dell and T. F. A. Connelly. All but two of these are residents of Bishop Creek. The Association is certain to be full of energy and be well managed. It will be of very great service to promoting the development of the resources of the country and in the improvement of stock and all kinds of farm produce. Where there is so much determination to help themselves as is shown by the people of Bishop Creek success is deserved and will surely come.

Fine Entertainment.

As a mark of appreciation of the Independence Brass Band the young ladies have decided to give an entertainment for its benefit on Monday evening, August 1st. The exercises will be of a varied and interesting character. Several features will be introduced of a kind entirely new here. Much careful preparation has already been made to present these novelties in the most attractive form. In order to surprise the audience we are requested not to publish the whole programme as it will be presented, but expectation of the pleasure that awaits the spectators may be allowed a wide range without risk of disappointment. The entertainment will end with a ball and supper.

Important Meeting.

The citizens are urgently requested to attend a meeting at Independence on Saturday, July 30, at 2 p. m. The purpose of the meeting is to have a general consultation upon matters pertaining to the 18th Agricultural District Fair. As this is of general interest to the people of the county it is hoped that as many as can possibly attend will do so. By order of Directors,

C. MULHOLLAND, Sec.

The talk about the division of the State continues. Whether such division would be wise or otherwise remains to be seen; but in the event that it should be accomplished there can be little doubt that Inyo county would be part of the new State. The completion of rail connection will make our relations and interests far closer with Los Angeles than will ever be possible with Sacramento or San Francisco.

District Attorney Forbes has gone to Sacramento. It is whispered around that the Mission of Mr. Forbes is to persuade the Governor to interfere in the location of the Fair of the 18th Agricultural District. All the power the Governor has in the matter is to appoint Directors; when that is done he has nothing more to say. If the rumor is correct as to the purpose of Mr. Forbes in going to Sacramento his trouble is more than likely to be lost.

A sheep man named U. Miranda has been arrested and tried before a Justice of Peace of Mono county for refusing to take out a county license as provided by an Ordinance of the Board of Supervisors. Miranda was fined $40, or be imprisoned until the fine be paid at the rate of one dollar per day. A writ of habeas corpus was applied for but the Superior Judge affirmed the validity of the Ordinance, denied the writ and remanded Miranda to the custody of the Sheriff. The case will be rushed through to the Supreme Court as rapidly as possible. The sheep men have united to make a test case.

WESTERN CRŒSUSES.

How Some of Them Made Their Money and How and Where They Live.

"It is curious to notice," said a well-known Wall street banker the other day, "how many Western men of wealth have within a few years taken up their residence in New York. There is no place like New York. The ladies have much to do with the hegira of Western millionaires to New York. The ladies go to Saratoga or Newport in the summer, and meet New York people of wealth, who invite them to the city, and once here they are soon in the swirl of fashion. A month or two really settles the matter. They are dissatisfied on returning home, and soon they are again in New York."

John W. Mckay, the bonanza king, alternates between New York and San Francisco. He does not aspire to social prominence. There are many men here who won fortunes in the West, though they were born at the East. C. P. Huntington has lived here for many years. He is worth $30,000,000 and he lives in fine style on Park avenue. His social standing is not very high. He is a man of rugged nature, a natural leader and in his sixty-fifth year. Engrossed in great enterprises, he cares little or nothing for society. Senator Leland Stanford comes here quite frequently. He is worth $40,000,000, even after setting aside $10,000,000 for an industrial university on his 6,000-acre ranch in California. Charles Crocker lives here. He is second vice president of the Central Pacific road, and is worth $10,000,000 or $15,000,000. He is now about sixty-five. Once upon a time he was a blacksmith. Railroads gave him his millions. D. O. Mills, who made most of his fortune in California, has lived here for about fifteen years. He used to drive a hack in a small town up the Hudson River. He went West and became associated with William C. Ralston, that financial meteor of California, in the organization of the California Bank, which was to come down with a crash and drive Ralston to a suicide's death. Soon after coming to New York Mr. Mills was advised by William H. Vanderbilt to buy Lake Shore. He did so and made nearly $3,000,000 with which he erected the Mills building. Senator John P. Jones, of Nevada, is also often seen in New York. He made five or six millions in California mines and lost it trying to become a railroad magnate. John W. Mackey has helped him, and it is understood that he has got on his feet again largely through mining speculations. He is an Englishman, fifty-eight years of age.—O. W. Riggs, in Philadelphia Press.

CAKES WITHOUT EGGS.

In a little book just published by the Judson Printing Co., New York, a large number of practical, though novel, receipts are given for making cakes of various kinds, from the informal griddle-cake to the stately bride-cake, without eggs, by the use of the Royal Baking Powder. Experienced housekeepers inform us that this custom has already obtained large precedence over old-fashioned methods in economical kitchens, and that the product is frequently superior to that where eggs are used, and that less butter is also required for shortening purposes. The advantage is not alone in the saving effected, but in the avoidance of the trouble attendant upon securing fresh eggs, and the annoyance of an occasional cake spoiled by the accidental introduction of an egg that has reached a little too nearly the incubatory period. The Royal Baking Powder also invariably insures perfectly light, sweet, and handsome cake, or when used for griddle cakes to be eaten hot enables their production in the shortest possible space of time, and makes them most tender and delicious, as well as entirely wholesome. There is no other preparation like it.

His Idea of Legislation.

HARRISBURG, May 14.—It is related of a member of the house that, after observing the proceedings for a couple of weeks this session, he went to the senator from his district one day and said:

"Senator, I want you to make me a bill, will you?"

The senator graciously assented, and then asked: "What do you want the bill for?"

"Why, to read in place, of course," said the member.

"Oh, yes, certainly," returned the senator; "but I mean what do you want the bill about? What do you want to accomplish by it?"

"I'm not particular," said the representative carelessly; "anything at all will do. I only want to read a bill in place, as all of the other members have done, and I don't care what it is about."

The senator drew him a bill, and he presented it with some show of importance.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

On to Berlin.

Chicago Girl—Oh, I do wish we could get up a war with Germany.

Omaha Girl—Bless me, dear, the Anglo-Saxons and the Germans all came from the same root. You shouldn't dislike Germans.

"Oh, I don't. But I was just thinking how comfortable the Parisians have been since the German war. They can enjoy themselves as much as they wish, while we have to just sacrifice ourselves on the altar of culture."

"Really, I don't see how."

"Why, they can hoot and yell all they want at Wagner's music and then call it patriotism."—Omaha World.

Complimenting Grover.

A statesman from Gotham who visited President Cleveland last Saturday morning found him in unusually good spirits. The president furnished the reason for it by saying: "I entertained royalty last night, you know, for the first time in my life. I dined with a queen."

"I thought you always did that nowadays," came the quick rejoinder from one of the visitors, to which the president gracefully smiled a silent acquiescence.—New York Sun.

Holmes and Kapiolani.

Queen Kapiolani, the Hawaiian potentate, is charmed, positively charmed, with Boston. "And do you know," she said to Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, the other day, "do you know, Doc, that I never heard of Boston until a Washington gentleman told me about it last week?"

Dr. Holmes did not fancy this at all. Subsequently he told his friend Aldrich that he knew by the queen's furtive glances at his plump personnel that if she had him alone in her desert isle she would eat him.—Chicago News.

An Ignorant Official.

Condemned Criminal—I want you to go out and bring me in two mince pies.

Jailer—It will be time to go to the scaffold in a few minutes.

"See here, you ignorant minion of the law, do you suppose a man of my intelligence would eat all the mince pie he wanted under any other circumstances, say?"—Omaha World.

A HOTEL OF LONG AGO.

Arrangement of the Rooms—Under the Shelves—The Hearth.

In 1807 William Hodge, Sr., built an addition to his log house in Buffalo and established a tavern, about which his son, William Hodge, wrote thus: "This noble mansion consisted of two rooms on the lower floor, with a wide hall between them. It had battened doors, naked peeled beams and windows of 7 by 9 glass. The north room was used as a parlor, sitting room, main kitchen and dining room. The south room was the more public one. There the eye was caught by large black letters on an unpainted door, telling the visitor to 'Walk in,' and there too was the 'latch string,' hanging on the outer side of the door. This room also contained the bar, which was partitioned off in one corner.

"Under the shelves stood the whisky and cider barrels, and on them were the kegs of brandy, rum and gin, and one or two kinds of wine, as Madeira and port. Maybe there was also there a keg of shrub or peppermint cordial, and occasionally one of metheglin. Sometimes, in the proper season, the bar would contain a barrel of spruce beer, home made, of course. There was no lager beer in those days. The sugar box and money drawer were made to slide under the front counter board. The white sugar then used came in high, tapering, solid cakes called sugar loaves, done up in coarse brown or black paper. A few may yet be seen. The liquors sold at the bar were always measured out in the wine glass and gill cup, or in larger quantities when desired.

"Cider was sold by the pint or quart, red peppers being added; and in cold weather it was set upon coals and embers to heat. The mixed drinks furnished at the bar were termed 'slings,' and were made of sugar water and brandy, rum or gin, well stirred with the 'sugar stick.' Hot slings were made the same way, except that a hot iron was put in, to temper them, a slight sprinkling of nutmeg being regularly added. A 'sangaree' was made in the same way, using wine instead of the stronger liquors. Nearly all were as much in the habit of using these different kinds of liquors as beverages as people now are of using tea, coffee and even milk.

"The fireplace in the barroom and that in the north room were without 'jambs'—the chimneys being built with split sticks and plastered. That in the north room was furnished with a 'trammel pole' and 'trammel' with hooks to match, for hanging kettles, etc., over the fire. The hearths were made of stones gathered from the fields. The chamber rooms were used for sleeping purposes. An addition built on the east side of the barroom was used as a back kitchen and wash room. It had a sloping roof, being a 'lean-to.' The fireplace was built in one corner of it, and the chimney and hearth were of the same materials as those in the other rooms."—Detroit Free Press.

The Hotels of Java.

The hotels in Java are not the best in the world, while their cooking is certainly the worst. A cup of coffee is brought by your room boy whenever you awake, and at 9 there is breakfast in the dining room. It consists of two cold boiled eggs cooked the night before, slices of bologna sausage and cheese, and bread and butter, and in order to have "everything to match" the coffee is cold. An hour before tiffin decanters of gin and bitters are placed on the veranda, and every one helps himself a son gre, some taking half a dozen glasses, either because it is free or because the coming meal is so poor that the system demands a great amount of fortifying to meet it.

At 1 o'clock a bell announces tiffin, but it isn't good form to go at once, and if one did the viands wouldn't be any hotter. The first dish served is rice, which is put into a deep soup plate, and then six or eight other dishes are presented in quick succession, of each of which a spoonful is put on the rice and the whole is then stirred vigorously and eaten in a lukewarm state. The number and variety of edibles mixed and mangled in that rice dish are more wonderful than tempting. Later beefsteak and potatoes in tiny portions, tough and greasy, are served, and then follow plenty of fruits and a cup of excellent coffee. So ends the "rice meal," as it is called. The dinner is always at 8 o'clock, even in the remotest country hotel, and the viands are always cold and covered with a thin coating of grease. And the course that precedes the roast is always warm with stewed fruit.—Batavia Letter.

Unveiling an Indian Idol.

A rock which the Sioux Indians near Fort Yates, D. T., have worshiped for generations as the petrified form of a young squaw, was formally unveiled the other day and dedicated to peace and plenty. It appears that the white settlers in the vicinity have long supposed that this specimen of nature's art work exerted a restraining influence on the Indians, but of late the rock has been removed from its original resting place and it was feared that with its removal its charm had disappeared. So the suggestion was made to Sitting Bull that the statue be placed upon a permanent pedestal and unveiled with appropriate ceremonies. This pleased the chieftain and 5,000 Indians assembled to take part in the strange medley of Christian and pagan rites by which the unveiling was accompanied.—Reno Gazette.

Steam Heat in Railway Cars.

The Engineering News, in the course of an able article on the substitution of steam heat for stove heat in railway cars, shows that no more than 2 1-2 to 3 1-2 per cent. of the locomotive's supply of steam is required for heating the average train. It adds that this quantity can be obtained without reducing the load, increasing the heat surface, decreasing the speed, or decreasing the loss by radiation. It is only necessary to push the fires a little when the locomotive is on a level or down a grade and to use steam that can be spared while the train is resting at stations.—Chicago Times.

Students and the Sponge Bath.

If the student is in fair health and desires to remain so during the school course, would decidedly recommend him to take the sponge bath before retiring. If he is vigorous, cold is better than tepid water for this purpose. It will help to neutralize the effect of severe study on the brain, and induce healthful sleep. The scalp should be brushed well before retiring for the night, and the face and hands well washed with soap and water.—Herald of Health.

Janitors' Families.

Janitors' families are quite a feature of Gotham's population. Living in sky flats, they are enabled to enjoy quiet lives and a society of their own, which are privileges quite unknown to their more aristocratic neighbors. Nearly every building is inhabited by one of these families.—Chicago Times.

—It is often the case that the man who serves you in a restaurant is misnamed. You are the waiter, not he.

RUSSIAN LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

A Project on Foot—The Hereditary Nobility—A Curious Contrast.

There is a project on foot in governmental circles in Russia for the reorganization of local administration, the central principle of which has been rumored to be to base it on the principle of rendering the members of the class of hereditary landed nobility alone eligible for election to the provincial assemblies. The facts disclosed in an essay on the subjects by Mr. Stcheglovitow go to disprove the practicability of this plan, which could only be advisable, or even possible, if there existed a class of noble landed proprietors soundly constituted and more or less proportionally distributed throughout the empire. This is not so. In the north and extreme east of Russia there may be said to be no such class at all. The large province of Archangel contains but four individuals who may be so considered.

Of the 115,000 titled land owners in the whole country nearly one-half are concentrated in nine governments of Little Russia, White Russia and Lithuania, and even there the distribution is very unequal; Poltava registers 10,157, while Kharkov contains only 3,412. In the Baltic provinces the aristocratic element is insignificant. In the Ukraine more than half the so called nobility might be more properly designated yeomen, their freeholds being less than 250 acres. In the south and southeast the great territorial magnates predominate, from 40 to 80 per cent. of the estates consisting of more than 12,000 acres, but even here they are being pushed from their pride of place and social supremacy by new men from the ranks of commerce.

The numbers of the hereditary nobility are sensibly on the decline. In twelve years they have fallen off 18 per cent. The diminution of their revenues dates farther back and is in a greater ratio. The absentee habits of the great nobility and the want of instruction of the smaller, who do not reside upon their lands, render them unfit to be the exclusive occupiers of the new government posts, in the opinion of the writer above mentioned. He thinks that there should be both a land property qualification and an educational test required in the case of every aspirant to office. From another source it would appear that the aristocratic members of the existing zemstvos are in a large majority, even in the towns, and that they require no special privileges to be conferred upon them by law to enable them to maintain their ascendency as local leaders.

But a very curious contrast is presented by the conduct of these gentlemen in the assemblies of the nobles and in the zemstvos, for many of them are members of both. In the former they seldom bring forward questions of general interest, although they have a right to do so, and are mainly engaged in asserting their class prerogatives, while in the latter they put themselves at the head of the popular and progressive movement, which is alien, if anything, to their class interests. In this way they show themselves at the same time egotistic and generous, defenders of their personal interests to the detriment of general interests and champions of the latter to the detriment of their own.—London Times.

Poor Old Marshal Bazaine.

Speaking of the recent attempt to kill him, poor old Bazaine said to a London Telegraph correspondent that he had come to resign himself during the past years to his painful fate, which doomed him to be an obligatory and enforced victim, a sort of consolatory holocaust, for a defeat that was inevitable. He once more insisted that had Marshal McMahon helped him in time things would have taken a different turn, and he took credit to himself for having avoided a bombardment which would have caused the destruction of thousands of men. Unfortunately his countrymen were fickle. Asked his opinion as to Gen. Boulanger and the present situation, the ex-marshal said that if the chief of the French army were of a merit which corresponded with the popularity to which he has attained he might succeed in doing something, but one man was not enough. The war might take place, and the French, in his opinion, were ready so far as effective fighting strength went, but it remained to be seen whether they had changed in temperament or not.—New York Tribune.

What Girton Girls Do.

Girton is a great school for girls in England. The amusements there take the form of "rages," just as they do outside. One girl student tells the following: One winter we all suffered from a mania for blowing soap bubbles, and how to procure the indispensable long clay pipes without giving rise to scandal became the problem of the day. One student used to be the observed of all observers as in the half hour after dinner, when "the tables were drawn, it was idlesse all," she would waft with skillful breath a large bubble from the foot of the main staircase to the first floor and back again in safety. Most people's bubbles collapsed ignominiously at the third or fourth stair. A doll show was the next pastime; after a week or two of preparation a number of daintily dressed wax beauties and a few Dutch maids of all work were duly exhibited, and then sent off for the children's ward of a large hospital.—Philadelphia Times.

Buttermilk as a Drink.

A great physician once said that if every one knew the value of buttermilk as a drink it would be more freely partaken of by persons who drink so excessively of other beverages, and further compared its effects upon the system, to the cleaning out of a cook stove that has been clogged up with ashes that have sifted through, filling every crevice and crack, saying that the human system is like the stove, and collects and gathers refuse matter that can in no way be exterminated from the system so effectually as by drinking buttermilk. It is also a remedy for indigestion, soothes and quiets the nerves, and is very somnolent to those who are troubled with sleeplessness. Its medicinal qualities cannot be overrated, and it should be freely used by all who can get it. Every one who values good health should drink buttermilk every day in warm weather and let tea, coffee and water alone. For the benefit of those who are not already aware of it, I may add that in the churning of it, the first process of digestion is gone through, making it one of the easiest and quickest of all things to digest. It makes gastric juice, and contains properties that readily assimilate with it, with very little wear upon the digestive organs.—Hall's Journal of Health.

"I DON'T KNOW WHAT AILS ME."

says many a sufferer. "I have the 'blues' frightfully; I am troubled with headache and dizziness; I have lost my appetite; there is a bad taste in my mouth constantly. What is the matter with me?" We will tell you; you are "bilious." Get a bottle of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," use it faithfully, and you will soon be a new man again. All druggists have it.

The official whose business it is to look into the affairs of the nation is very properly called pry minister.

TROUBLE AHEAD.

When the appetite fails, and sleep grows restless and unrefreshing, there is trouble ahead. The digestive organs, when healthy, crave food, the nervous system, when vigorous and tranquil, gives its possessor no uneasiness at night. A tonic, to be effective, should not be a mere appetizer, nor are the nerves to be strengthened and soothed by the unaided action of a sedative or a narcotic. What is required is a medicine which invigorates the stomach, and promotes assimilation of food by the system, by which means the nervous system, as well as other parts of the physical organism, are strengthened. These are the effects of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine whose reputation is founded firmly in public confidence, and which physicians commend for its tonic, anti bilious and other properties. It is used with the best results in fever and ague, rheumatism, kidney and uterine weakness, and other maladies.

"Said Aaron to Moses
Let's cut off our noses."

Aaron must have been a sufferer from catarrh. The desperation which catarrh produces is often sufficient to make people say and do many rash things and many continue suffering just as if no such cure as Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy existed. It cures every case from the simplest to the most complicated, and all the consequences of catarrh. A person once cured by Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will not be apt to take cold again, as it leaves the mucous membranes healthy and strong. By druggists.

MURDERED BY PREJUDICE.

Thousands of men die every day who might be saved. Prejudice has murdered many a man and woman. If it were believed that the sum of disease could be reduced by physic much would be gained. The nights are of death would not frighten us as it does. In our modern civilization we ought reasonably to expect disease to settle upon us because we do so much to attract it; because we so often and so steadily expose ourselves to it. At the same time we all ought to understand, as a part of our rudimentary education, that to save ourselves from the effects of exposure some kind of fortification should be built around our vital forces lest the enemy carry us, as it were, by a sudden onslaught. For many years the unprejudiced have used BRANDRETH'S PILLS in this way and they have proved a most effective wall against the approach of disease. Stop the daily murders—we had almost said suicides—by using these Pills. They speak for themselves—as they act. When everything else has failed BRANDRETH'S PILLS have saved lives. They are to be had at every drug store.

The following words, in praise of DR. PIERCE'S FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION as a remedy for those delicate diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women, must be of interest to every sufferer from such maladies. They are fair samples of the spontaneous expressions with which thousands give utterance to their sense of gratitude for the inestimable boon of health which has been restored to them by the use of this world-famed medicine.

$100 THROWN AWAY. JOHN E. SEGAR, of Millenbeck, Va., writes: "My wife had been suffering for two or three years with female weakness, and had paid out one hundred dollars to physicians without relief. She took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it did her more good than all the medicine given to her by the physicians during the three years they had been practicing upon her."

THE GREATEST EARTHLY BOON. Mrs. GEORGE HERGER, of Westfield, N. Y., writes: "I was a great sufferer from leucorrhea, bearing-down pains, and pain continually across my back. Three bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' restored me to perfect health. I treated with Dr. ——, for nine months, without receiving any benefit. The 'Favorite Prescription' is the greatest earthly boon to us poor suffering women."

THREW AWAY HER SUPPORTER. Mrs. SOPHIA F. BOSWELL, White Cottage, O., writes: "I took eleven bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' and one bottle of your 'Pellets.' I am doing my work, and have been for some time. I have had to employ help for about sixteen years before I commenced taking your medicine. I have had to wear a supporter most of the time; this I have laid aside, and feel as well as I ever did."

IT WORKS WONDERS. Mrs. MAY GLEASON, of Nunica, Ottawa Co., Mich., writes: "Your 'Favorite Prescription' has worked wonders in my case.

Again she writes: "Having taken several bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' I have regained my health wonderfully, to the astonishment of myself and friends. I can now be on my feet all day, attending to the duties of my household.

TREATING THE WRONG DISEASE.

Many times women call on their family physicians, suffering, as they imagine, one from dyspepsia, another from heart disease, another from liver or kidney disease, another from nervous exhaustion or prostration, another with pain here or there, and in this way they all present alike to themselves and their easy-going and indifferent, or over-busy doctor, separate and distinct diseases, for which he prescribes his pills and potions, assuming them to be such, when, in reality, they are all only symptoms caused by some womb disorder. The physician, ignorant of the cause of suffering, encourages his practice until large bills are made. The suffering patient gets no better, but probably worse by reason of the delay, wrong treatment and consequent complications. A proper medicine, like Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, directed to the cause would have entirely removed the disease, thereby dispelling all those distressing symptoms, and instituting comfort instead of prolonged misery.

3 PHYSICIANS FAILED. Mrs. E. F. MORGAN, of No. 71 Lexington St., East Boston, Mass., says: "Five years ago I was a dreadful sufferer from uterine troubles. Having exhausted the skill of three physicians, I was completely discouraged, and so weak I could with difficulty cross the room alone. I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and using the local treatment recommended in his 'Common Sense Medical Adviser.' I commenced to improve at once. In three months I was perfectly cured, and have had no trouble since. I wrote a letter to my family paper, briefly mentioning how my health had been restored, and offering to send the full particulars to any one writing me for them, and enclosing a stamped-envelope for reply. I have received over four hundred letters. In reply, I have described my case and the treatment used, and have earnestly advised them to 'do likewise.' From a great many I have received grateful letters of thanks, stating that they had commenced the use of 'Favorite Prescription,' had sent the $1.50 required for the 'Medical Adviser,' and had applied the local treatment so fully and plainly laid down therein, and were much better already."

JEALOUS DOCTORS. A Marvelous Cure.—Mrs. G. F. SPRAGUE, of Crystal, Mich., writes: "I was troubled with female weakness, leucorrhea and falling of the womb for seven years, so I had to keep my bed for a good part of the time. I doctored with an army of different physicians, and spent large sums of money, but received no lasting benefit. At last my husband persuaded me to try your medicines, which I was loath to do, because I was prejudiced against them, and the doctors said they would do me no good. I finally told my husband that if he would get me some of your medicines, I would try them against the advice of my physician. He got me six bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription,' also six bottles of the 'Discovery,' for ten dollars. I took three bottles of 'Discovery' and four of 'Favorite Prescription,' and I have been a sound woman for four years. I then gave the balance of the medicine to my sister, who was troubled in the same way, and she cured herself in a short time. I have not had to take any medicine now for almost four years."

THE OUTGROWTH OF A VAST EXPERIENCE.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the uterus, or womb and its appendages, in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequalled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic. It promotes digestion and assimilation of food, cures nausea, weakness of stomach, indigestion, bloating and eructations of gas.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequalled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, or "whites," excessive flowing at monthly periods, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

In pregnancy, "Favorite Prescription" is a "mother's cordial," relieving nausea, weakness of stomach and other distressing symptoms common to that condition. Its use is kept up in the latter months of gestation, it so prepares the system for delivery as to greatly lessen, and many times almost entirely do away with the sufferings of that trying ordeal.

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years. Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

FINDING PHARAOH.

Interesting Account of the Discovery of a Precious Egyptian Mummy.

In a line of tombs beyond the Ramesseum lived four sturdy Arabs named Abd-er-Rasoul. They supplied guides and donkeys to tourists who desired to visit the ruins of Thebes, and sold them genuine and spurious antiquities. When they found a mummy, it being forbidden by law to sell it, the head and hands and feet were wrenched off and sold on the sly, while the torso was kicked about the ruined temples until the jackals came and carried it away. I purchased a head and hand of one of the brothers amid the dark shadows of the temple at Qurneh. Early in 1881 circumstantial evidence pointed to Ahmed Abd-er-Rasoul as the one who knew more than he would tell. Prof. Maspero caused his arrest, and he lay in prison in Kench for some months. He also suffered the bastinado and the browbeating of the women repeatedly; he resisted bribes, and showed no melting mood when threatened with execution. His lips told no more than the unfound tomb—and not as much. Finally his brother Mohammed regarded the offer of "bakshish," which Prof. Maspero deemed it wise to make, as worth more to him than any sum he might hope to realize from future pillaging, and made a clean breast of the whole affair. How the four brothers ever discovered the hidden tomb has remained a "family secret." On July 5, 1881, the wily Arab conducted Herr Emil Brugsch Bey, curator of the Bulaq Museum, to Deir-el-Bahari and pointed out the hiding-place so long looked for. A long climb it was, up the slope of the western mountain, till, after scaling a great limestone cliff, a huge, isolated rock was found. Behind this a spot was reached where the stones appeared to an expert observer and tomb-searcher to have been arranged "by hand," rather than scattered by some upheaval of nature. "There," said the sullen guide; and "there" the enterprising Emil Brugsch Bey, with more than Egyptian alacrity, soon had a staff of Arabs at work hoisting the loose stones from a well into which they had been thrown. The shaft had been sunk into the solid limestone to the depth of about forty feet, and was about six feet square. Before going very far, a huge palm-log was thrown across the well and a block and tackle fastened to it to help bring up the debris. When the bottom of the shaft was reached a subterranean passage was found which ran westward some twenty-four feet and then turned directly northward, continuing into the heart of the mountain straight except where broken for about two hundred feet by an abrupt stairway. The passage terminated in a mortuary chamber about thirteen by twenty-three feet in extent and barely six feet in height. There was found the mummy of King Pharaoh of the Oppression, with nearly forty others of Kings, Queens, Princes and priests."—Photographer Wilson, in Century.

CHRIST AND PILATE.

A Literal Translation of the Roman Intendant's Sentence Upon Jesus.

A correspondent sends the following as a correct translation of the sentence of Pontius Pilate. He says this curious document was discovered in A. D. 1280, in the city of Aquill, in the Kingdom of Naples, in the course of a search made for the discovery of Roman antiquities, and it remained there until it was found by the Commissaries of Art in the French army of Italy. Up to the time of the campaign in Southern Italy it was preserved in the sacristy of the Carthusians, near Naples, where it was kept in a box of ebony. Since then the relic has been kept in the Chapelo Caserta. The Carthusians obtained, by petition, leave that the plate might be kept by them as an acknowledgment of the sacrifices which they had made for the French army. The French translation was made literally by members of the Commission of Art. Denon had a fac-simile of the plate engraved, which, on the sale of his cabinet, was bought by Lord Howard for two thousand eight hundred and ninety francs:—"Sentence pronounced by Pontius Pilate, Intendant of Lower Galilee, that Jesvs of Nazareth shall suffer death by the Cross. In the seventeenth year of the reign of the Emperor Tiberius, and on the 25th of March, in the most holy city of Jerusalem, during the Pontificate of Annas and Caiaphas. Pontius Pilate, Indendant of the Province of Lower Galilee, sitting in judgment in the presidential chair of the praetor, sentences Jesvs of Nazareth to death on the cross between two robbers, as the numerous testimonies of the people prove that—1. Jesvs is a misleader. 2. He has excited the people to sedition. 3. He is an enemy to the laws. 4. He calls Himself the Son of God. 5. He calls Himself falsely the King of Israel. He went to the Temple, followed by a multitude, carrying palms in their hands. It likewise orders the first Centurion, Quirilius Cornelius, to bring him to the place of execution, and forbids all persons, rich or poor, to prevent the execution of Jesvs. The witnesses who have signed the execution against Jesvs are: 1. Daniel Robani, a Pharisee; 2. John Zorobabel; 3. Raphael Robani; 4. Capet. Finally it orders that the said Jesvs be taken out of Jerusalem through the gate of Tournea."—Notes and Queries.

—"Pa," said little Jimmie, "I was very near going to the head of class to-day." "How is that my son?" "Why, a big word came all the way down to me, and if I could only have spelled it I should have gone clear up."—Wide Awake.

CULTURE FOR ALL.

Mr. Cable's Idea of the Formation of Home Culture Clubs.

Since taking up his abode in Northampton, writes a correspondent from that place, Mr. Cable has not only busied himself with literary work, but has been looking about him to see in what way he could make the city of his adoption better from his having come into it. The idea of "home culture clubs" suggested itself to him, and after carefully considering the subject and maturing a plan of operation, the first Home Culture Club was started last October. The growth of the movement was at first intentionally slow, and up to January of this year only five clubs, with a membership of about thirty, had been formed. Later on another club was started.

Last February a general meeting of all the clubs was held in Philharmonic Hall, to which many outsiders were invited, and all that time Mr. Cable explained to his hearers the general object of the clubs. From this time interest in the movement has deepened to such an extent that letters have poured in on Mr. Cable from all parts of the country asking for explanations of the object of the clubs, and asking him to come and talk to the people, and help them start the club for themselves. Up to this time Mr. Cable has replied that the movement was yet so larely experimental that it would be unwise for him to explain it to the country at large.

The great object of the culture club is the mutual improvement of its members while meeting in their different homes, thus securing what might be called distinctively the "fireside influence," as distinguished from the efforts after improvement in large associated bodies on one hand or by individual isolation on the other. Sociability is merely an incidental feature, and the members of the club are not gathered together for sociability, but for the interchange of mutual benefit. At the head of each club is the leader, who should be somewhat better equiped mentally than the other members, that he may be in truth the leader and serve as a lifting influence for those whose advantages have been less than his. The meetings of each club are held not oftener than once a week. These clubs are in no sense schools, but are intended to stir up and maintain culture in an easy way, as the clubs may determine.

Each club selects its own subject, to which it gives its undivided attention. Language, history and politics are some of the subjects now being pursued by different clubs. One of the most flourishing clubs is reading Carnegie's "Triumphant Democracy." The weekly meetings of the different clubs are held in rotation at the houses of the different members, and as three-fourths of the present members represent families, the benefits derived from the club are extended to the different families in a greater or less degree. When the members meet they are expected to work upon the subject selected by the club, and make a report of their meeting and the work done by them.

These reports are handed to the general secretary, who condenses them and sends a copy of this condensed report to each club, so that all the members know what progress they are making from week to week as a whole. Experience shows that the membership of each club should not generally exceed six, as this number can be accommodated at the different homes, where a larger number could not, and also the meetings at the homes of the various members would come more frequently to each one.

Members from other clubs frequently attend the meetings and serve as a bond to unite the clubs in one body. Once in four or five weeks all the clubs meet in joint assembly, when they listen to music, songs, readings and speeches. These meetings serve as a stimulus to the members by reason of the large numbers present.

Up to last April, six clubs have been in active operation in this city, doing excellent work and reading a large amount of valuable literature. It is noticeable that the clubs have gone into history and kindred studies, and the lighter class of fiction has been almost wholly omitted. The other night a number of gentlemen, including ministers, professors, lawyers, merchants and others, met Mr. Cable at the Mansion House, when he outlined the subject as given above and started six new clubs among them, and new ones among the ladies will follow.—Boston Globe.

More Time Wanted.

As one of the hospital ambulances was galloping up Michigan avenue the other day, with the driver sounding the gong every minute, it passed a farmer and his team near Washington avenue.

"What is it?" asked his wife, who was on the load behindhim.

"A fire engine, I guess."

"But I didn't see any fire coming out of it."

"Well, I 'spose the conflagration hasn't got fairly started yet. Give it a little time."—Detroit Free Press.

—A writer in the Boston Transcript says: "I have made a new acquaintance in the culinary line during my visit to New York. A dish which I never had heard of was served to us at the table of a man who considered dining in the light of a fine art. This rare and most attractive of delicacies is nothing more nor less than beavers' tails—no connection with the light-house of that name. They were served as an entree, and they are without exception the most attractive article of food that I have met in a twelvemonth."

ALL ABOUT ELEPHANTS.

Many Comparatively New Facts in Regard to Their Habits and Peculiarities.

The main supply of ivory is derived from the African elephant, and not from his Indian or Asiatic brethren. There are numerous differences between the two—the African beast being the larger, a foot taller, having bigger ears, a somewhat flatter head, and with four nails on each foot; whereas the Asiatic elephant has four nails on each hind foot and five on his fore feet. It is the absence of tusks in the Asiatic elephant, or their partial development, which is the great difference. The tusks of the African elephant vary with the size or age of the animal. They have no roots like the teeth of animals, "but fit firmly into what are called premaxiliary sockets, and if we should examine this buried or hidden portion, we should find that it was partly hollow, so to speak, the ivory at the root being very thin and surrounding a pulp, where the ivory is being secreted."

As the animal increases in years the hollow in the tusk is filled up with solid material, and "an extremely old elephants it disappears entirely, and the tusk is solid ivory." The dentine, as in the matured tusk, begins in a pulp cavity, which may be ten inches or more long, imbedded in the skull, and this is soft. Sometimes it happens that a bail has been fired at an elephant, which is imbedded in the softer portion of the tusk, and after a while is surrounded by the harder ivory. Such balls are sometimes found by ivory workers.

The true teeth of the elephant have a curious method of progression, "moving gradually forward from behind in regular succession; each old front tooth as it is worn away being pushed out of place by its successor." The wear and tear on the teeth of this animated grinding-mill must be immense—a large Indian elephant consuming eight hundred pounds of green fodder in the eighteen hours.

An English officer in charge of elephants belonging to the Government found that for years the animals had been given two hundred and fifty pounds of green fodder, and had been starved, because, through ignorance, the Government had fixed the rate. The elephant uses his tusks for attack and defense, but principally, in a wild state, to overturn trees of small growth, so that he can feed on their branches. Sir Samuel Baker measured mimosa trees four feet six inches in circumference and thirty feet high, which elephants had pulled down, and the damage they cause is almost incredible. These trees, however, have no deep root, and are comparatively easy to overthrow.

It is the trunk of the elephant which is its most remarkable feature. Cuiver estimated it as containing forty thousand muscles. It is both hand and nose. Though the trunk is so useful, it is a very tender and delicate organ, and is not used in the rough manner generally supposed. "In making an attack, it is raised high in the air out of the way. When a great weight is lifted, it is not the trunk, but the tusks, which are employed, the former only holding the object upon the latter."

There are many facts in regard to elephants which are novel to readers. It is not generally known that there is a resemblance between the stomachs of the elephant and a camel, since both possess the power of storing water. Hunters have been often astonished at seeing elephants, which they have been chasing for some time, insert their trunks into their mouths, and there obtain a supply of water that is blown over their dry and heated body.—Golden Days.

SHOWING AN INTEREST.

The Duty of Adapting Ourselves to Other's Lives in Order to Advance the Cause of the Master.

This is the way of some who are counted peculiarly easy in their manner of adapting themselves to all whom they meet, but who have won their power by hard work, against their natural inclination, and who retain that power only by continued effort in its timely exercise. They have studied womanly methods of thought and feeling, as over against the manly methods, by the reaping of the best portraitures of woman by various women writers as well as those by men. They have watched the ways of children as children, in order to understand children, and to adapt themselves intelligently to children. They have informed themselves, from time to time, of the different subjects of society conversation, or of the more prominent themes of popular interest, outside of their own sphere of personal life; and whether they find themselves at a place of summer resort, or at a church sociable, or at a market-place, they deliberately consider their companions of the hour, and adapt their conversation to them, as if they were doing it spontaneously. Nor are these men mere society lovers, or seekers after the reputation of universal friendliness. Often it is by a mental wrench that they break away from their personal absorption in congenial thought or occupation, and strive unselfishly to conform themselves to the tastes and needs of others as a means of well doing in the world. And if they are thus all things to all, in order that they may by all things rightly represent their Master, and win to His loving service, they are more than justified in this endeavor to have and to show a kindly interest in their fellows.—*S.-S. A Tender Hearted Tyrant.

Some twenty years ago, when John A. Ellsler was manager of the Academy of Music in Cleveland, there was a man connected with the stock ompany in the capacity of heavy villain, while he was a good actor, had an inordinate fondness for sack, to draw it mildly, which he never did. We will call him De Budge, which is safer than to give his real name, for he is living yet, we think. At least we will give ourselves the benefit of the doubt.

De Budge was a very tender hearted man when full of his name. He would weep profusely over any tale of woe, no matter how remote it might be from his own time and environment. He used to say that he couldn't hurt a fly, and he couldn't when the barkeeper put it in his lemonade, as he generally did.

One afternoon when in his cups De Budge was discovered weeping as though his heart would break. When asked the cause he said he was thinking how cruel it was to make the Egyptians cross the Red sea in pursuit of the Israelites without first supplying them with life preservers.

You can gather from the above what kind of a heavy villain De Budge was when loaded to the guards.

One night when the play was "William Tell," De Budge was cast for the tyrant, Gessler, an equally heavy but more temperate villain appearing as the hero of Switzerland.

De Budge had been bulging pretty heavily during the afternoon and when he came to his dressing room to dress for his part it was observed that he was full. However, he managed to pull through very well until they came to the scene where Tell is commanded to shoot the apple from his child's head.

"Ferocious monster!" exclaimed Tell. "Make a father murder his own child!"

De Budge's chin began to shiver, but he managed to stammer:

"D——d—does he consent?"

Tell—With his own hand! Murder his child with his own hand!

De Budge's eyes filled with tears, and it was evident to those who knew him that he would soon begin to blubber.

Tell—The hand I've led him when an infant by! 'Tis too much for flesh and blood to bear.

"Thash sho," blubbered De Budge. "Don't shoot, Tell, don't shoot! I know jish how you feel."

The prompter cursed at the wing and tried to set him right, but Tell, hoping that the paroxysm would pass over, went right on with his part:

"Sir, have you no children?"

This gave the finishing blow to De Budge. He shrieked:

"Yes I have, Bill—two splen' boys! I love'm (hic) like er life's blood. Don' sh—, sh—(hic)oot, Bill; don' sh-h-oot!"

And he stumbled forward, attempting to throw himself into Tell's arms, that he might weep upon his breast.

It is hardly necessary to add that De Budge was seized and dragged off R. U. E. and the curtain rung down P. D. Q.—Texas Siftings.

His Anxiety Explained.

An unpleasant contretemps took place at the opera Tuesday night. A young gentleman, who had made the most desperate sacrifices to take his girl to the glittering show, had his attention attracted by a person immediately behind him, who, every few minutes, persisted in stroking his shoulder. "Gustavus," whispered the lady, "either that man is insane or he wants to abstract your collar button." "If he touches me again," replied the youth, fiercely, "I'll brain him with my binoculars." A minute afterward the intruding hand was felt upon his shoulder. The indignant dude stood up, turned around and froze the insolent fellow with an awful glance. Then, as he sat down with a complacent expression, as if to say, "I've fixed him now," the wretch hissed in his ear in a stage whisper: "Please sir, you've got the tails under you, and this is the first night that coat has been out." With a hollow groan the hapless boy read the story of his disgrace in his charmer's eyes, and when they buried Aida alive he would gladly have shared her fate.—San Francisco News Letter.

Quite Too Enthusiastic.

Wife—What do you think of the new girl, John?

Husband—Was that her that just let me in?

Wife—Yes.

Husband—Well, she's just a daisy.

Wife (icily)—Think so?

Husband (enthusiastically)—Think so! Why, she has a complexion like a moss rose, and eyes like—like—I don't know what. And her teeth are splendid, too.

Next day when John went home to dinner he was let in by a girl with a complexion like polished ebony, eyes as large as saucers and teeth like two rows of piano keys.—Boston Courier.

A Remarkable Memory.

"Did you hear that Miss Highkicker has married old Moneybags?" said a New York gentleman to a friend, as the lady in question—or rather the questionable lady—tripped down the stairs of a fashionable residence.

"No, it isn't possible?"

"Yes, he is married to her. She confessed the whole history of her life to him, including all her flirtations."

"You don't say! What a wonderful memory she must have!"—Texas Siftings.

THE MAXIM GUN.

Description of the Most Destructive Engine of War Ever Invented.

Statisticians inform us that the entire loss of life in wars between so-called civilized countries from the year 1793 down to 1877 has reached the enormous amount of 4,470,000. To many persons these figures convey a sad and solitary lesson. On the other hand, there are many who act as if they heeded or knew them not. Readers will differ as to whether it is laudable or otherwise to invent any means by which the above figures might possibly be increased; but, leaving the sentimental part of the subject aside, all will readily unite in admiring the wonderful mechanism which makes the Maxim machine gun an engine of terrible destructiveness. Particular interest attaches to it at the present time owing to the fact that the great African explorer, Stanley, provided himself with this formidable weapon, to be used defensively in the expedition on which he recently started for the relief of Emin Bey. Moreover, it obtained a gold medal at the Inventions Exhibition, and has been approved of, if not actually adopted, by many governments, the Chinese Government being particularly mentioned as one of of the largest purchasers.

Its rate of firing—600 rounds a minute—is at least three times as rapid as that of any other machine gun. It has only a single barrel, which, when the shot is fired, recoils a distance of three-quarters of an inch on the other parts of the gun. This recoil sets moving the machinery which automatically keeps up a continuous fire at the extraordinary rate of ten rounds in a second. Each recoil of the barrel has therefore to perform the necessary functions of extracting and ejecting the empty cartridge, of bringing up the next full one and placing it in its proper position in the barrel, of cocking the hammer and pulling the trigger. As long as the firing continues these functions are repeated, round after round in succession. The barrel is provided with a water-jacket to prevent excessive heating; and is so mounted that it can be raised or lowered or set at any angle, or turned horizontally to the left or to the right. The bore is adapted to the present size of cartridges; and the maximum range is 1,800 yards. The gun can therefore be made to sweep a circle upwards of a mile in radius.

Nor is the gun excessively heavy, its total weight being only 106 pounds, made up thus: Tripod, 50 pounds; pivot (on which the gun turns and by which it is attached to the tripod), 16 pounds; gun and firing mechanism, 40 pounds. The parts can be easily detached and conveniently folded for carriage, and may be put together again so quickly that if the belt containing the cartridges is in position, the first shot can be delivered within the seconds. It would therefore be extremely serviceable in preventing disaster through a body of troops being surprised. Reconnoitering parties, too, would deem it prudent to pay greater deference to an enemy's lonely sentry on advanced outpost duty if the latter were provided with this new machine gun instead of the ordinary rifle.

Immediately below the barrel of the gun a box is placed containing the belt which carries the cartridges. The belts vary in length. Those commonly used are seven feet long, and capable of holding 233 cartridges; shorter ones hold 120 cartridges, but the several pieces can be joined together for continuous firing. Single shots can be fired at any time whether the belt is in position or not—in the former case by pressing a button, which prevents the recoil; in the latter, by hand-loading in the ordinary way. To start firing, one end of the belt is inserted in the gun, the trigger is pulled by the hand once, after which the movement becomes continuous and automatic as long as the supply of cartridges lasts. At each recoil of the barrel, the belt is pushed sufficiently onward to bring the next cartridge into position; the mechanism grasps this cartridge, draws it from the belt, and passes it on to the barrel. Should a faulty or an empty cartridge find its way in, and the gun does not go off in consequence, there is of course no recoil to keep up the repeating action, and the mechanism ceases to work until the obstruction is removed.—Chambers' Journal.

AN EARNEST REQUEST.

How the Governor of Arkansas Made a Devoted Friend and Supporter.

The Governor of Arkansaw is sometimes forced to entertain peculiar visitors. The other day an old fellow from Gray Bayou called on him, and although he at once began to speak of the great prospects of the State, his actions showed so clearly that he had not touched upon the subject which prompted the visit, that the Governor asked:

"Can I do any thing for you?"

TITLE BY DIGESTION.

How an Eloquent Maori Proved the Ownership of a Tract of Land.

The Maories are logical reasoners, good debaters, fond of contentions, and as well up in the genealogy of their families as a Scotch highlander, and as stubborn when their rights are infringed upon. At a land court a middle-aged Maori had just finished making a long speech claiming that his name should be inserted in the grant to the exclusion of that of an old, grizzled Maori, who had sat quietly by without moving a muscle of his countenance and heard the young man ask in the course of his harangue, with much gesticulating: "Where are my ancestors buried but on this land, where I was born and brought up?" When he had ended the old man-eater rose, throwing off every thing but a waist-cloth, and bounding across the room addressed the court in this wise: "I have listened with disgust and contempt to the words of this tuturu [nobody]. What claim can he have to this land? I conquered long ago the people that lived on that land, when he was a small child, and the mistake I then made was in permitting him to live! And he asks: 'Where are his ancestors buried?' I tell him and show him. Here! here!" (patting his stomach with his left hand). "His ancestors are buried here. I ate them, and that is my title to the land.' No better or stronger title to native lands can be brought before the native land courts than the above described "Title by Digestion."—Overland Monthly.

FUSSY HOUSEKEEPERS.

Women Who Make Themselves Unhappy by Worrying Over Trifles.

A woman may be a good housekeeper without being a fussy one. There is nothing so trying to the nerves of a person as one of these fussy people in a family. She never rests herself nor allows any one else to rest. She is always in a continual worry for fear something is out of place. Each article of furniture is arranged in just such a way, so that a person going away to be gone some time may return at the end of a year or two and find every thing in the same place that it was on the day of departure. The curtains on all the windows must be pulled down to the same level, unless when the sun nods his golden head at one of the windows, then down comes that blind full length, directly in the friendly face of this genial fellow. No speck of dust ever finds a resting-place in her house, neither does a ray of sunlight. Both are unwelcome visitors, and she does not encourage them to enter.

When a visitor comes to the house her nerves are put to a hard trial, for she can not sit still for any length of time, but will jump up in the midst of some story that the guest is telling to arrange the table-cover that seems one-sided, then the conversation will go on until her sharp eyes catch sight of a thread on the carpet, and for her there can be no peace of mind until it is removed. At the risk of offending her caller she again arises, by so doing very often breaking the thread of the conversation, and picks up the obnoxious irritant. The visitor very justly remarks here: "Why don't you rest a little while, you always seem to be working; I never see you sitting down." "Oh," replies the housekeeper, "I don't have any time, I am working all the time, and I am never really done."

Very few callers feel at all at their ease while visiting such a person, and if they are at all like the writer of this article, they feel, to use a homely expression, "like a cat in a strange garret."

Women with large families are seldom fussy housekeepers, for even if they are so inclined their many duties will not permit them the time to fuss over little things, which is extremely fortunate for themselves and their families.

There is no necessity for a woman to be all the time worrying over such trifles as specks of dust. She can be a good housekeeper and her house be in any thing but disorder, without carrying a duster all the time in her hand, or without shutting out the sunlight, even though its brightness makes the furniture look dingy and she has to lay down a paper where the rays are in danger of fading the carpet.

"A place for every thing and every thing in its place," is a good rule by which to work, generally, but there are some things for which it is hard to find a place, and one of these is dust. The best receptacle for this article is a damp duster, which may be washed out easily, but even this will not hold all the dust in the room, and after a thorough cleaning of the furniture there will still be some about that will settle on the cleansed articles. Let it lie there; it will do no harm; better that it should be at rest than floating through the room, waiting to be breathed in by some of the inmates of the house.—Boston Budget.

INDIAN WARFARE.

A Veteran's Reminiscences of the Terrible War of 1862.

"Did I ever tell you of a little incident that happened during the Indian war of 1862?" said Lieutenant Morgan, of the police force, recently. "Well, I was a member of Company A, 6th Minnesota volunteers. When we were up in a county which had been devastated by the Sioux there was a detail from our company sent out under the command of Captain Grant, of my company, to bury the dead. Above Birch coulee we found a man who told us that he, with his wife, two daughters and a little son, were in the garden when he heard the crack of guns. His wife and daughters dropped dead. He grabbed the boy and started to run down the road. He was followed by the Indians, yelling savagely and firing rapidly. He could not carry the boy and get away, so he dropped him and ran on. The little fellow followed him, shouting, 'Papa, papa!' but was soon overtaken by the Indians, and he heard him shriek and knew that he had been killed. After burying the dead around Redwood we came back by the way of where the man lived and found the bodies of his wife and daughters as he had said. Down the road we found the body of the little boy thrown into the hazel brush. The bodies were all mutilated in a horrible manner. At the fight at Birch coulee the man was killed. If he told his name I can not now remember. That was one family entirely wiped out. In all the reports of those dark days this circumstance has never been published."—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

All raise on assessments on horses and cattle other than those given above were ordered to stand as published two weeks ago. The Board adjourned sine die.

J. D. HARGER,
Attest: P. H. MACK, Clerk. Chairman.

The prospect of railroad connection with Los Angeles in the near future is attracting more attention than ever to Owens valley. Wealthy men from the lower country are expected here soon to purchase lands. While it is very desirable to have capital invested in the country, yet if that capital is to be used in buying out small farmers in order to make big stock ranches we would be better without it than with it. One of the most successful farmers in Owens valley cultivates but eighty acres of land, and that land is no better than the average. In other parts of the State where land is of no better quality than here, hundreds of families are living in comfort, and some of them saving money, on tracts no bigger than ten to twenty acres. These people raise fruits and vegetables and, of course, their land is in the highest state of cultivation. Owens valley produces fruits that are not excelled any where, and there are thousands of acres of the best fruit lands not yet cultivated. Here is the country where men of small means can get homes, and this is the class that will be of most benefit to the country.

In the Democratic State Convention of Ohio Thomas F. Powell was nominated for Governor. This is regarded as a strong endorsement of the administration of President Cleveland. A plank in the platform adopted by the convention calls for legislation restricting immigration to those declaring their intention to become citizens. This is likely to be received with general favor.

AGENTS WANTED for the MISSOURI STEAM Washer. Active, honest persons all over the country, with or without team.
JOHN C. EVANS, Sweetgum, Mo., writes: "I stand up and affirm that a Washer sent me has held over and money to a large family than any Reaper and Mower that ever was put on any farm with less than 100 acres in cultivation. If you will put any one between that will take as much labor off men as this Washer takes off the women, and save as much money as it does and cost no more, I could sell one steamer a day." JOHN R. BOGGS, Ill., writes: "You ask what I think of the Washer? I think it is the best machine ever invented by man." JAS. Wm. Davis writes: "We have just served dinners on Monday as on any other day. Mr. Evans, if you run short, you can not buy cats for feed." I will ship a sample to those desiring an agency on a week's trial on liberal terms. A thousand per cent the best washer in the world for saving labor, clothes and soap. Pays capable agents big money. Write for particulars.
J. WORTH, 1716 Franklin Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Working Classes ATTENTION!
We are now prepared to furnish all classes with employment at home, the whole of the time or for their spare moments. Business new, light and profitable. Persons of either sex easily earn from 50 cents to $5.00 per evening, and a proportional sum by devoting all their time to the business. Boys and girls earn nearly as much as men. That all who see this may send their address, and test the business, we make this offer. To such as are not well satisfied we will send one dollar to pay for the trouble of writing. Full particulars and outfit free. Address GEORGE STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

BISHOP CREEK ACADEMY.

BEGINNING OF SPRING TERM.

The Spring term of the Academy, at Bishop Creek, will begin on Monday, March 28th, 1887.

Full Literary and Classical Academic Courses

Have been arranged, in accordance with which classes will be formed. Classes will also be formed in STUDIES PREPARATORY to those of the Academic Course.

Two prizes will be given during the year for excellence in declamation, also a prize for the highest rank in scholarship.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, JULY 30.....1887.

There are nine patients in the hospital at Lone Pine.

Ed. Walker was up from Olancha a few days this week.

Mr. Luce wants a number of men to work at the marble quarry.

L. Wood is making further improvements on his store building.

A. R. Conklin, Esq., arrived home from Los Angeles last Wednesday.

A brother of C. B. Rawson arrived at Independence on Wednesday.

The merchants in town are beginning to get new grain from farmers around.

Dan. Crough has gone on an excursion away up about the Mono lake country.

Mr. Israel Luce came up from the quarry on Thursday; he returned next day.

Tom Bastian, foreman of the San Carlos mine has moved his family into the new house near the mine.

N. Rhine is doing a big business; the boys are kept on the jump from daylight until after 9 o'clock each night.

Ed. Manton, a miner from Darwin, died at the County Hospital last Saturday. He was a native af Ireland, aged about forty years.

The band boys have been practicing diligently of late for the entertainment Monday evening. The band is making rapid progress.

Four men are at work in the old Orofino mine, at Chrysopolis. They are getting out some good gold ore and the Maxim mill will soon be started up on it.

Letters addressed to the following parties remain unclaimed at the office at Independence: Frank Hilton, William Hounor and Mrs. W. W. Neilson.

S. D. Thurston left town yesterday morning for Gold Mountain, Neveada, to attend to the selection and shipping of pipe for the Independence water works.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at the M. E. Church to-morrow [Sunday] evening at 8 o'clock. Praise service at quarter to 8. Sunday school held at 11 o'clock a. m.

There is a good deal of excitement among Eastern mining men over the discovery of a rich gold-bearing quartz ledge in Michigan. The location of the find is near Ishpeming.

It is reported that a large strike of silver and lead ore has been made near the marble quarry. The names of the finders or the extent of the ore body have not been reported.

Eighteen arrests of sheep men had been made at Bridgeport during the week ending with Monday last. Every sheep man who refuses to take out a license in Mono county is arrested.

Rev. J H. De La Matyr will leave town on Monday morning to attend the Methodist Conference which meets at Carson on Thursday, August 11th. He will go by way of Bodie.

Mr. J. J. Gunn has gone to Lookout to attend to the working of the Minietta mine, in which he is interested. The mine has been showing up well of late, and promises to be a good thing for the owners.

Mr. W. R. Tibbetts has the largest three-year-old colt in the valley. He is of Norman—Planter stock, very dark brown, and of fine form and build. Mr. Tibbetts has two or three colts from him that show all the best features of the sire.

The stream of money flowing into the Los Angeles banks is greater than ever. Instead of diminishing it is increasing in volume. The number of strangers arriving there is greater than ever, and all who come from the East bring money.

A fire last Sunday night in Los Angeles destroyed the Chinese portion of the town. All the large Chinese stores as well as the Joss house were destroyed. The loss is placed at $100,000, with no insurance, as all insurance had been withdrawn last Saturday.

A notion has been entertained that oranges could be grown in parts of Owens valley. About the first of last April Mr. Luce brought up a couple of young trees and planted them at the marble quarry. The trees are doing well so far and the experiment will be watched with interest.

Mrs. Brazzanovich, of Soda Springs, Nevada, came to Independence on Wednesday and will stay some days yet. She has been looking around through the valley to chose a location for a home, and thinks the vicinity of Independence would suit her better than any place she has seen yet.

A person who was in Los Angeles recently and came to Independence a few days ago, says he heard many real estate dealers and others wish earnestly for a railroad to Owens valley. If the gap were only closed there would be a rush of people here.

The Chino ranch, in Pomona valley, near Los Angeles, has been subdivided and will be sold in tracts of from five to forty acres. The ranch contains 50,000 acres and is the property of Richard Gird. The land has hitherto been used for stock raising.

On the farm of W. S. Enos, near town, the growth of blue joint just cut was so heavy that a man had to go in front of the machine and pitch the cut grass out of the way. Mr. Enos is quite familiar with the richest lands of Yolo county and he says he never saw such a growth of grass as this.
